H. F. Davidson has received reports from districts in the East where straw-berries are extensively grown that come into market at the same time with Hood River berries. These reports are very encouraging to Hood River growers. In some places in Missouri and Arkansas strawberries have been grown for the past two or three years at a loss to the rowers, and many are plowing up their patches. While on his trip East, Mr. Davidson was shown returns on whole carloads of berries that did not average 25 cents to the crate. Out of this 25 cents the grower had to pay for picking cents the grower had to pay for picking and boxing and other necessary ex-penses. Hood River berries still keep the lead in shipping qualities. No other section has yet succeeded in producing a berry that will sell in a local market two days after picking along with Hood River berries shipped thousands of miles.
