Perils of a Trip to Nome.

The days grow longer as the season advances and we get farther north. One day, as it neared 10 p. m., dusk was settling and our captain, C. F. Hall, saw a great iceberg ahead, five or six times larger than the ship. He prepared to anchor to it for the night, and slowly we dangerously moved towards it. The rope ladder was put over the bow, and a sailor made ready to jump off onto the frozen ice. Just as the boat struck the mass he leaped, and down onto the testates until a railroad is built. mass he leaped, and down onto the broken mass he fell, steadying himself to keep from slipping into the cold ocean. The great hawser was thrown to him, and he ran with it to a large projection to circle it round. But the wind was high and the angry waves digestion makes you sat sleep. wind was high and the angry waves digestion, makes you eat, sleep, work and happy. Satisfaction guaranteed or money anchorage. The man was left standing on the heberg. Women shouted, "Can we save him?" and men looked up, with fear in their eyes, at the fast approaching night. It was an hour later that we managed to bring up to the windward of the ice, and then, with a great crash, the second line thrown from the ship, fastened it securely around a projection and immediately climbed on board. All around us was the ice, and even our passage southward was blocked. We then kept moving in order to keep out of the crushing ice drifting towards us from all sides.

A week ago we spoke a big vessel on our starboard which had been in our present position, trying to get to Nome. They were running short of coal and turned back for the 600 mile run to Dutch Harbor. A boat belonging to the same company as the South Portland arrived a day after we landed at Dutch Harbor. The manager of the company was on board, and it was decided to

On leaving Seattle two stowaways were found, and our boat pulled in at Port Angeles to put them on the light-house beach. Another, a young boy, popped his head out of the cabbages in one of the life boats on the deck when two days out, much to the captain's and passen gers' surprise. He was put to work sweeping the deck and scrubbing out the pilot house. We called him "Cabbage" on the trip, and much sport did the more frivolous of the passengers have in mak-ing him dance for their amusement. Card games were ever the diversion. Games started from the wake-up bell and continued till late at night. smokers would get together and fill the little smoking room, puffing away with all their might in order to run the other berlain's Cough Remedy. man fiddler gave selections. The ladies gathered in the dining saloon after the three sittings at the tables were over, and singing, accompanied by the strong voices of the men, passed many a gay hour. The ladies also formed a sewing circle and offered to patch and sew on gircle and offered to patch and sew on circle and offered to patch and sewing circle and offered to patch and sew on buttons. One of the engineers asked them to sew on a pair of pants to four buttons he had. He got back a pair of trousers that would fit a monkey.

One morning we awoke with ice jammed on all sides, and in this position we lay for nearly a week the ice.

tion we lay for nearly a week, the ice bumping on the iron sides, threatening destruction at any minute. Finally the mass moved, drawn by the great current northward, and we were free. Our captain drove the propellors as fast as steam would take us. It was nearing dusk when we felt a crash that shook the vessel from bow to stern. We had run into a gigantic iceberg! The loud orders of the captain, the screaming of he passenger, the hurrying to and froot the sallow, caused the state of the sallow, caused the sall mortgaged that were going down. The news were going down. The pumps were started also. The officers soon returned and reported holes on both sides of the bow large enough for a man to crawl through, but that the tear occurred where one of the fresh water tanks was located, which saved us from sinking immediately. It was doubtful whether the water tank would withstand the outside pressures. Two days after the secretary were signed as a steamer and slow, ly made our way through the loe fides to one. around the ice, and our captain going directly north.

Later our provisions began getting low. When we started from Seattle we even fresh milk—which, by the way, we was never any fear of the passengers on the score of running entirely out of provisions, for our hatches only had to be opened to allow us to get to the freight.

Here indeed was enough to keep a regiment, consisting of several restaurant outfits, individual stores, ship supplies, etc. Our trip to Nome, which was promised to last but 8 to 10 days, was being stretched to over a month.

We had our diversions on the trip.
