W. E. Neff thinks he has discovered a remedy for the ravages of gophers in the orchard. He has one acre in orchard on his place at the forks of Hood river, and the trees have never been bothered by gophers, while his neighbors have found the gopher the only drawback to growing an orchard. Mr. Neff grows clover in his orchard, and every spring, after the snow goes off, the ground is completely plowed by the work of the gophers. He thinks they feed upon the clover roots, and so long as they have the clover, have no occasion to bother the fruit trees.
