Two men came to town last week for a coffin for a woman who died about eight miles from town on the East side. They refused to give their names to S. E. Bartaness, undertaker, and refused to to Oregon. He spent much time and montalk with the editor of the Glacier, who ey in the effort, but met with indifferent naike with the callor of the Glacher, who by in the enort, but her with indifferent asked the dead woman's name. Rou-maine, of the Mt. Hood Stage Co., hauled the coffin out. A young man who went the coffin out. A young man who went with him said he was a son of the de-ceased and that he worked for the Port-now known as Sauvie's island, a few miles helow. Portland. This was during ceased and that he worked for the Port-land Cracker Co. The family are Swedes but further than this the neighbors know nothing about them.

The dwelling of R. Pealer, three miles city, had his attention drawn to Oregon by Kelley's and Wyeth's circulars and south of town, came near being destroyed by fire last Saturday. Sparks from pamphlets, and enrolled himfelf as one the chimney set fire to the moss on the roof. Mr. and Mrs. Pealer were alone at the time, and when the roof was found who desired to become a colonist. When he told his wife what he had done she was very much disconcerted, and finally to be ablaze, Mrs. Pealer attempted to prevailed upon him to abandon the trip. He, however, had a strong desire to go West, and a few years afterwards began extinguish the flames with the garden hose. She screamed for help and Wm. Davidson, S. W.
