Hood River strawberries, and a can of a new variety that has been tested at Salem for several years, called the Oregon Ideal. The large glass dishes showed the color of the canned product. Ordinarily annual strawberries have a much narily canned strawberries have a mushy appearance when emptied out of the can,

The next one tasted were the first and second grade Wilson berries put up by the Salem cannery under Mr. Allen. They were solider and had a fine flavor, and for color and flavor are far superior to any canned strawberries generally sold. They are superior to any Califor-nia canned strawberries ever shown in

The fourth can tasted was the justly, famous Hood River strawberry. This surpassed the two cans put up by Mr. Allen in size and color, but Mr. Allen's berries surpassed the Hood River berry in firmness of texture and flavor, having more fruit and acid quality than the Hood River berry. This may be due to the fact that the Salem berries were a very fine crop this year, and again, are very fine crop this year, and again, are produced without irrigation. All pronounced the Hood River berry very fine, and indeed it takes the top market price. It has been made a great industry at

The last berry to be tasted by the com-mittee was a new berry that has been grown for three years at Salem in a small

It was a shame strong. and a disgrace to Hood River. In all my experience and observations, extending over some nine or ten different states, I have not found a locality that would at all compare with our valley as a poultry raising district. The light sandy soil, rolling, well drained land, abundance of shade, mild winters, nearness to market, freedom from troublesome "varmints" ounces, he said there were many in the many and many other favorable features tend to make this the bost poultry country! have ever meen; and we do not even supply Hood River's local market! The Rural Northwest of Oct. 15th, quoting General Freight Agent Markham of the Southern Pacific Railroad, says that more than 500 carloads of poultry and eggs were imported from east of the Rocky mountains last year, amounting to more than $1,500,000 into California alone besides the imports of Oregon and Washington points. These figures indicate an abundance of room for "expansion" in our poultry products without danger of depressing the market. Almost every family in the valley outside of Hood River and many who are inside could raise with little trouble and a good profit, 50 to 500 fowls per annum. My hens have already netted me over one dollar per head this year, and I have been handicapped in almost every way except as regards the market. With the favorable conditions that exist on many of our valley farms they would almost double it. The care of the fowls is work that can be done largely in spare and aside from the dollars and cents in it, the pleasure derived from taking care of a well bred and well kept flock will more than repay one for the little trouble incurred. How many of the Glacier readers will agree to make a start to ward building up a flock of pure bred fowls the coming year? The first can opened had stood on the shelves a number of years and had all these qualities in the highest degree. No one would want to eat them as a relish or made into pies on their appearance, and it is no wonder people don't buy such an uninviting article.

The next one tasted were the first and second grade Wilson berries put up by the Salem cannery under Mr. Allen, glacier, 2 miles long and one mile across lower rim; Sandy river glacier, 3 miles long with a base of a mile or more. Besides these there are two other small ones, the zigzag and William Ladd gla-ciers. There are some fine waterfalls on or near the mountain on the streams running from its perpetual snows. On one branch of the middle fork of Hood river there is said to be a waterfall 2000 up to the apex of the great crevasse, stretching along under the dome of the peak, and wide open from the precipice at the head of Eliot glacier, and as there was no way of getting over in safety the anticipated trip to the top had to be abandoned, particularly as the safety reposted by the proposal and head appropriate the days before ropes had been removed ten days before.
Looking from the snowfields downward over the Hood river valley one can get a

In the same dish as the others it had easily 50 per cent more color, being a beautiful rosy wine red. The berries all held their shape and color and had the highest and richest fruit flavor of any that were there, also by about 50 per cent. The test made on Saturday was a fair one and was not made to detract from the merits of other products in his line. But it has proven that this vicinity can produced the best strawberry in the world for commercial canning, and it is just as saily produced as corn in Illinois or cotton in Mississippi. The strawberry business is in its infancy in the Williamette valley. Other varieties will no doubt be found that may surpass the Oregon Ideal, but for the present this berry will be pushed to the front in the cannery trade by Mr. Allen and others interested.

Indifference of Voters.

It is not strange that a large propor-tion of voters are comparatively indifferent to the results of the county and state and even Nationai elections. Most of them count for nothing, except on elec-tion day, hence the frantic effort of those who have a personal interest at stake to make the voters believe they must help "save the country." The bosses run the conventions, name the candidates, collect and distribute the funds, and parcel out the offices, and the voters are considered as mere counters, to record the bosses' and office-holders' will. The political machines are insolent up till shortly before election, and then their manipulators become frantically solicit-They expect the voters to pull them through, and then go home and attend to their own private business and let the office-holders alone for another two or four years. The right kind of a primary election law may give the voters a little more chance to have a voice in politics, and something to say as to who shall be candidates and how office-holders shall perform their duties. Then voters will not be so indifferent.—Port-
