

Hood River Glacier.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1900.

In another column will be found an interesting write-up of Hood River by E. Hofer, editor of the Salem Daily Journal. Mr. Hofer visited our horticultural fair in October. His time has since been occupied so that he did not write up his notes taken on that occasion till the issue of the Journal of Dec. 13th. He very kindly mailed 100 copies of his paper of that date to the Glacier, and they have been given out where they will do the most good. The Salem Daily Journal is an independent paper that has something to say on all public questions of interest to the state or nation. It is a member of the Associated Press, and we believe the only newspaper in the state outside of Portland taking a report of the Associated Press dispatches. Its editor is a good friend of Hood River, and to any of our citizens wishing to take a daily paper from the state capital during the session of the legislature we can say that none is more fearless than the Journal in giving its opinions and speaking for the best interests of the state. The Daily Journal is sent to subscribers for the low price of $3 a year; $1 for four months.

Portland will not ask for appropriations from the legislature and congress for an exposition in 1902, but will celebrate the centennial of the Lewis and Clark expedition of 1804-5 with a big exposition. The Oregon Historical Society has taken the matter in hand, and there is every prospect that a great North Pacific exposition will be held in 1906 that will do honor to the men who, one hundred years ago, overcame all obstacles in navigating unknown rivers and traversing the wilderness in their trip of 4,000 miles from St. Louis to the mouth of the Columbia.

Considerable talk is being indulged in about the division of the state of Oregon on the line of the Cascade mountains, making two states. The only benefit to be derived from a division that we can see would be that it would give us two more U. S. senators and more offices to go round. The state is too thinly populated to make division popular. All of our state institutions would be crippled by division. Politicians might like to see the number of offices doubled, but taxpayers will be slow to ask for an increase of taxes.

The Chicago Chronicle, one of the greatest of the great independent newspapers of the country, is more quoted from than any paper we know of. Its editorial writers are of the best. Its pages are made up every day with the happenings of the world gotten up in faultless style, and its illustrations are superb. The price of the Daily Chronicle is $4 a year; the Sunday edition, 48 pages, better than any magazine, $2 a year.

Portland licenses gamblers and the owners of slot machines by rounding them up once a month and making them pay a fine. A correspondent of the Oregonian jocularly asks the same privilege for the "gentlemanly burglar"—let him pay a fine, enrich the city treasury and resume business.

The Heppner Gazette, the pioneer paper of Morrow county, has enlarged to a six-page paper. The Gazette is ably edited and illustrated by Colonel J. Watermelon Redington, the pioneer journalist and discoverer of the Heppner Hills. The Gazette is a welcome exchange.

Champ Clark, democratic congressman from Missouri, says he gained 20 pounds during the campaign—the only democratic gain he heard of this year.

The cabbage crop was a failure in the East this year, and now only the well-to-do can afford sauer-kraut with pork or corned beef and cabbage.

When you see it in the Glacier you may know it is seen by others.

Choice four-tier Hood River apples have been conspicuously offered for sale at $1.50 per box at one of the large retail markets in Portland lately, says the Rural Northwest.

Dr. M. H. Clarke, father of the wife of Rev. Henry Moyes, died at Fairview, Dec. 14th. He was over 84 years of age.

Mrs. W. H. Peugh came up from Hood River Monday last week and is visiting her children in Sherman county. She likes her new home in the Hood River valley very much, but it seems quite natural to be again in Sherman county.—Wasco News.

Sick headache absolutely and permanently cured by using Moki Tea. A pleasant herb drink. Cures constipation and indigestion, makes you eat, sleep, work and happy. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back. 25c and 50c. Williams & Brosius.

A few years ago cordwood was sold for something like $1.25 a cord, delivered on the bank of the Columbia, but at the present time parties have been offered as high as $2.10 per cord. We believe the steamboats are now paying $2.50 per cord delivered on the wharves, and we predict that the time is not far distant when it will cost them $3. The timber in close proximity to the river is becoming very scarce, and when it is necessary to go farther back in the woods, the expense of hauling will naturally raise the price.—Pioneer.

No other history of the United States is so abundantly supplied with historical maps explaining the text as Ellis' United States History. No other history of the United States is written in so interesting a manner, the text is as absorbing as a romance. Prof. Ellis is one of the most fascinating writers of the day, and in this history he has exhibited an enthusiasm and literary charm which make the most delightful impression upon the reader.

Acker's English Remedy will stop a cough at any time, and will cure the worst cold in twelve hours, or money refunded. 25c and 50c. Williams & Brosius. The president has appointed J. M. Patterson postmaster at The Dalles.

Hood River as Seen by an Editor.
The Journal man accompanied by a very competent guide, inspiration and critic had the pleasure of being whisked out to Hood River one beautiful Indian summer morning just before the presidential election. It is not possible to take a profligate short trip in fall of year than a few hours ride from Salem to the center of the fruit growing region of Wasco county, the morning ride down the Willamette, through French Prairie, past the Falls of the Willamette, formerly called Multnomah, through the great rustling port of Portland, past the shipping of all nations, up the mighty Columbia, with its rocks and cascades in profusion enough to almost call it a garden of the gods, until we come to our destination.

Hood River is perched on the shoulder of the mountain that is formed at the junction of the snow-leaping river flowing directly from Oregon's most majestic snow peak. At first you see but a row of store buildings and warehouses—a few cozy hotels and saloons that look as if they were waiting for an evening train. After lunch a walk up the terraced streets revealed a charming residence street, with plenty of churches and school buildings, capped with a high school, and on top of the mountain spreading orchards and residences in all directions, reaching to the foot of the mountain. At all on the town site are the groups of gigantic oak trees that we have nowhere seen equalled for beauty.

As we turned to go down into the city again a panorama was spread out before our eyes to the north revealing the grand outlines of Mt. Adams, the winding canyon of the White Salmon, and in the depths at our feet the deep blue mirror of the Columbia, plowed by steamers going up and down the river. A grove of towering firs and great pines hide the town below. At our back was spreading riches of the high bench land planted for miles with orchards and berry patches, interspersed with cozy suburban farm homes, water running by the roadside and ready to have its fertilizing flow directed into every field. The roads were excellent of smooth, sandy gravel and wide enough for several fast teams to trot alongside, clattering merrily homeward from the little city at the foot of the mountain.

We next gave our attention to the annual fruit fair, the secretary being a former Iowa friend whose argument in favor of the fair had persuaded us to visit this little paradise that had so many revelations of beauty and resource in store. A pavilion about 200 feet long was filled on both sides and with tiers of fruit on display through the middle. The aisles were crowded with hundreds of farmers and orchardists and town people and nearly everybody seemed to have something on exhibition, and the zeal and animation on the faces of all plainly told the story of great local pride in their industry and enterprise. Hardly anybody in the city but has a fruit tract, and the country, and hardly anybody for ten miles in the country but feels he is wholly or in part a resident of Hood River. Nowhere have I felt the spirit of united interest between city and country so strongly present as in this little town and its immediate surroundings. Hood River is like the bottom of the pocket for a big, healthy, prosperous rancher, where the results of his labors are jingling in most concrete form.

One cannot enumerate in a short newspaper article all the show of fruit displayed under even this small canvas pavilion. The apples predominated over all, as Oregon seems to be the home of the apple. But there were grand displays of peaches, pears, quinces and other fruits. The wonderful fact about this industry is that in ten years what was a semi-wilderness in the heart of the mountains has been brought to a high state of productivity, and there are thousands of acres in smiling orchards, bearing wealth and producing happiness, where Nature gave no sign that she intended these scenic beauties to grow. Only last season 37,000 crates of fresh strawberries were shipped from here to the markets of the large cities, and Hood River strawberries are known from New Orleans to Manitoba and throughout the Rocky mountain region as the best berry the west produces.

I asked thousands of questions of the fruit growers here and it would take a book to print their answers and experiences. But one fact shone forth and that was with the climate, soil, mountain air and enterprise, coupled with transportation facilities, they had a bonanza and were aware of it. I will tell a few stories of yield: Three acres of Baldwin produced 1000 boxes. A six year old orchard yielded 200 boxes per acre of Newtowns and Ben Davis. A ten year old orchard this year brought in its owner 2,400 boxes. A 5 acre crop on the trees brought its owner $650 this fall and had nearly $100 worth of leavings not considered good enough for shippers. Hon. E. L. Smith's orchard has paid expenses ever since it was six years old and Mr. Smith is too modest a man and too good a politician to tell how much it has netted him. He is quietly putting all he can into apples.

But this is not all fairland. There are some drawbacks. It takes some years to get an orchard into bearing. In the early times strawberries and small fruits must be pushed to make a living. But they are a sure thing. Then there are snow falls and some years ago a freeze that took nearly half of some orchards. But the valley is not one-tenth developed. There are at least 50,000 acres that can be made into orchards of the greatest commercial value. The West Side only is supplied with irrigation. The East Side will be in the near future. These bench lands that make orchards are 400 to 800 and 1200 feet altitude. Snowfall two to four feet deep, and the Chinook winds come and lick them into slush. The higher lands are almost unexplored but enough is known to make it certain that they are the peachlands. One day a railroad, to Mt. Hood will open a perfect wilderness of peach orchards to the markets of the world, and such peaches as the world has not yet seen, and in the presence of which so-called California fruit will take off its hat and blush with shame.

We closed the trip to Hood River with a drive up the river, across the head of the valley and back through the orchard belt. We drove through miles of orchards the fruit whereof literally covered the ground and many of the trees covered it two and three deep. The more prolific varieties have to be propped and braced up and are reeling and struggling to carry their load of hundred-fold intoxication. Look down the windows of apples half a mile long and alternating red and gold. Here and there is an unfortunate tree broken down with its own overflow of wealth. In the pavilion I counted 83 varieties of named kinds of apples all displayed not on plates but in bushel boxes.

We thought we had seen some of the finest mountain scenery in the West. We had crossed on nearly all the transcontinental routes, from the Canadian Pacific through the awe-inspiring Selkicks to the wonderful scenery of the Rio Grande and royal canyons of the Colorado. But a half day drive up the east side of the Hood River canyon and back across down the west side reveals new wonders of nature and discounts any previous sight in the way of mountain scenery. We climb the tolls, steep promontory east of the town until the river is a thin blue thread in the vast depths below. A turn of the road brings us out on the edge of the mountain wall about 2000 feet above the city. In the foreground are miles upon miles of forests checkerboard with squares of orchard and meadow, glistening in the sunlight. The eye mounts terraced by terrace of evergreen verdure until it meets the skyline southwest where stands Mt. Hood, serene and unapproachable, mistress and queen of all the princelings of the air, rearing her head above all the wealth of nature spread at her feet, spreading her bridal train of snowy garments in all directions. We had seen Hood from all directions, but we had never seen a snow mountain before. Never before had we stood at a point in a happy, smiling, fruitful valley completely surrounded by rim of snow peaks, with Hood as sentinel to the south and Adams to the north—a panorama restful yet of surpassing grandeur. Across the valley we penetrate masses of pines, fir and oak timber that is worth fortunes to the lumber companies that will clear the land and sell the timber for the yet greater harvest of wealth that will come from the orcharding as it is carried on here with commercial skill and true western grit and enterprise.—E. Hofer, in The (Salem) Daily Journal.

At the school election in Pine Grove district, last Saturday, D. A. Turner was elected a director to fill the unexpired term of Edward Hawkes. It was also decided to continue the school two months from the 7th of January, with the present teachers.

It has truly been said that "History is the chiefest study among human studies, capable of enriching and illumining all the rest."

Among the tons of thousands who have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for colds and a gripe during the past few years, not our knowledge, not a single case of pneumonia. Chas. Whitfield & Co., 240 W. 4th Ave., Chicago, one of the most prominent retail druggists in that city, in speaking of this says: "We recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a gripe in many cases, as it not only gives prompt and complete recovery, but it also cures any tendency of the lungs to result in pneumonia." For sale by Williams & Brosius.

If soft-shelled eggs appear in the poultry house during the winter, the proper thing to do is to cut down the feed—the morning feed, not the one which is given in the afternoon. Soft-shelled eggs are almost positive proof that the hens are too fat, and the best way to get rid of the fat is to make the hens work it off in the scratching material. For the morning feed not more than one handful of wheat to ten hens should be given as long as soft-shelled eggs are found in the nests.—Farmer's Voice.

How to Cure Croup.
Mr. R. Gray, who lives near Amenia, Duchesne county, N. Y., says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best medicine I have ever used. It is a fine children's remedy for croup and never fails to cure." When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough has developed, it will prevent the attack. This should be borne in mind and a bottle of the Cough Remedy kept at hand ready for instant use as soon as these symptoms appear. For sale by Williams & Brosius.
