

Hood River Glacier

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1901.

The attempted assassination of President McKinley, at Buffalo last Friday, meets with a response from the whole civilized world of genuine sympathy for the victim and the nation whose chief executive he is, and condemnation for the blood-thirsty anarchist who committed the awful deed. Every difference of political opinion in the United States was put aside, and the whole nation of 75,000,000 of people awaited anxiously each bit of news which revived their hopes for the president's final recovery; and now that Mr. McKinley's physicians report him on the road to recovery the people breathe with a sense of gratification. The interest and solicitude shown for our president by the people of foreign countries indicates the spirit of friendliness with which the world regards us. The speedy recovery of the victim from his dangerous wound is a high compliment to the work of modern surgery. The frightful deed came as a rude shock to the democratic ideas of Americans who are accustomed to frown at the precautions for armed guards and attendants with which the European dignitaries must surround themselves whenever they appear in public. We can hardly reconcile ourselves to an armed escort for our president and other high officials. Former statesmen have met death at the hands of demented individuals who imagined they held political grievances against their victims, but this is the first instance in the United States—the country where the public officials are the public servants—wherein the life of the chief magistrate has been attempted by an anarchist. The trouble is we have permitted our ideas of freedom and liberty to carry us too far. The fact that the anarchists have been allowed to hold meetings, to lecture and to distribute their mischievous literature freely through the mails seems ridiculous when we are brought face to face with the dangerous results of such work, when shown up by the awful deed of last Friday. Such experiences are severe lessons, but perhaps they are needed. No punishment can be too severe for the accomplice and the abettors of this crime, and all anarchists should be exterminated or banished from the country. The creed of the anarchists is destruction of all semblance of law and order. As true freedom can only be secured through the protection of law and order, the existence of anarchy in the United States must be crushed out, if the sacred institutions of our land are to be perpetuated, and our people are to continue to enjoy the rights and privileges of a free people. The question of treating with the anarchists in the manner they deserve presents a serious problem, with the like of which America never before has had to deal. It may be necessary for all civilized nations to take joint action in ridding the world of the anarchists.

Wasco County Institute.
The annual teachers' institute of Wasco county was called to order by Superintendent Gilbert, Wednesday morning, September 4th. In his opening remarks the superintendent said he had attended 13 institutes in Wasco county and had called the teachers together six times; that an average of 8.7 months school was held during the year, against 6.5 months last year and a little more than 5 months the year preceding. This is surely encouraging.
Thursday, the number of teachers increased to 96. Superintendent Landers led each session of the institute in singing. The instructors were: President W. C. Hawley of Willamette university; Professor R. C. French, principal training department, Monmouth; City Superintendent Landers of The Dalles public schools. Each subject was presented in a clear and logical manner and was well received by the teachers.
President Hawley delivered several talks on history and civil government, taking up the subjects together and showing their relation and association. He took the circumstances leading up to the adoption of the constitution, following the history of England and our separation from her rule; also the qualifications of president of the United States, senator and representative, showing that they were a growth and natural development and why our government took the form it did in the first place of all. He also presented a subject "physiological psychology," taking for his subject, "What is in Our Heads?" He said all there is in the world is in our heads; that our brain contains 600,000,000 to 2,000,000,000 cells, and the number remains the same throughout life; that no man has ever developed all the cells in his brain, but that more were being developed at present than ever before, and more being developed in the United States than in any other country, all on account of the development of our public school system. A child becomes honest or dishonest, good or bad, according to the development of the cells. Cells develop by use, and if used in the right direction, good would result, or the opposite. All education should be to make the child feel that he is capable only of good and incapable of bad. He congratulated our school and community on the fact that so many of our noble young men and women devote themselves to the cause of education.
Professor French presented the subjects of reading, numbers and geography. Throughout his work he used a sketch to illustrate his work, or called upon teachers to work at the blackboard. He explained the meaning of true reading and the necessity of better understanding of reading. In number work he presented the various combinations of primary numbers and that frequently perplexing subject, fractions. In geography he showed, by presenting a few articles clipped from magazines, how easily it was to secure material for work.
Superintendent Landers discussed the high school course recently adopted. He said lack of uniformity had caused much confusion and led to a considerable discussion and finally adoption of a uniform state course, which is a combination of the various courses in the state, as well as including some things from other sources. He also talked on "Music in Public Schools."

The teachers of The Dalles served visiting teachers with ice cream and cake on Wednesday evening. A very pleasant time was the opinion of all present.
Thursday evening President Hawley gave a most interesting and instructive lecture on "A Trip to Europe," illustrating Saturday, Professor Campbell of the normal school and Superintendent Ackerman talked to the directors and patrons of the schools of Wasco county. At this meeting 15 of the 71 districts of Wasco county were represented.
