A certain lady dreamed frequently of a certain house until it had become exceedingly familiar to her; she knew all its rooms, its furniture; it was as well known to her as that in which she lived her waking life, and, like a good wife who has no secrets from her husband, she often talked over all the de-

them. They took the house. In the course of their occupancy they learned that the house had the reputation of being haunted; that several people before them had taken it for short terms, but had seen-or fancied they had seen-"something," and had left before their term of tenancy expired. Had these new tenants not brought their own old servants with them, it is likely that they would have had some difficulty in whipping up a domestic staff, so uncanny was the reputation of their apparently reputable house. The new tenants dwelt in the house with all satisfaction and peace through the summer months until their term of tenancy came to an end. On leaving, husband and wife expressed their satisfaction to the local agent. "The only thing," said the wife, "that we were disappointed in is that we never saw the ghost." "Oh, no!" said the agent. "We knew you would not see the ghost." "What do you mean?" asked the wife, rather nettled.

Derobert even had false keys for opening the guard's private drawers and boxes, in which he often concealed his goods.

The smuggler generally took by pref-erence a fast night train. When the THE REGULATOR LINE frontier was crossed and the custom house passed, he would replace the tobacco, etc., in the boxes or traveling bags, which were then handed over to accomplices awaiting their chief on the French stations.

It is estimated, according to the prosecution, that by these means the French Government has been robbed of nearly £10,000 pounds during the last two years.
