How's your yellow jackets? Housewives putting up fruit have swarms of yellow jackets buzzing around them or helping themselves to the fruit. And the person who has not felt the sting of a yellow jacket this summer has not had much to do with fruit. One day last week a lady put up six glasses of jelly and set them away in the wood shed to cool. The glassos were covered with paraffine, but the yellow jackets ate holes in the paraffine and cleaned five glasses as clean of jelly as if they had been washed. The sixth glass of jelly was in process of being devoured by the yellow jackets when discovered.

W. H. Weiss of Alsea Bay, who has been sojourning in Portland for the past month, traded his place at Alsea for M. Lauffenberger's place in Hood River.

Mr. Lauffenberger went to see the place at Alsea after he had made the trade, and found that an orchard represented to be on the land was just outside his line. Mr. Lauffenberger returned to Hood River and on Monday got out an injunction in the circuit court at The Dalles restraining Weiss from selling the place formerly owned by him in Hood River.
