

Hood River Glacier

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10, 1903.

Odell Notes.

The north wind doth blow, and I don't know what poor Robin will do, but the roads between here and town are getting fine. The residents of road district No. 6 are to be complimented on their enterprise in raising money for the improvement of the road. If $800 can be raised for temporary work, and the county duplicates, what can be done for permanent improvement. Why don't the citizens of Odell pattern after our brethren in district No. 6? Let us call a meeting. It can be held at the little white store. Who will second this motion? The road connecting the East and West Side road running east from Charley Davis' place was abandoned some time ago by the rural mail carrier. I regret writing this item, but perhaps Hood River people should know it.

The sad news of the sudden death of Congressman Thos. H. Touge was a shock to the writer, knowing him personally for years, and realizing his influence and energy in promoting the best interests of the state. His sudden taking away will prove a serious loss to the state. Mr. Touge represented not only his district faithfully and well but the state at large.

C. A. Wynn will soon have his new turning lathe running. He has put in a four-horse power overhead wheel under his flame that will prove a labor saving proposition. He has a power drill that will also be run by water. When the natural resources are utilized and the conditions with reference to soil and climate fully understood, this country will yield untold wealth and many more happy homes will be built. Then peace and plenty shall reign.

The city newspapers are almost constantly harping upon diversified farming and the possibilities of the dairy and poultry business, all of which shows that they have never engaged in such work. Last week I took eight rolls of butter down town and knocked the market. Couldn't sell a roll at any store there. I did, however, dispose of five rolls, at a loss, to customers of the merchants there. Why not make a price and buy what comes into town especially a good article. I know of no other way to succeed in business. Yesterday Mr. Helmer, Mount Hood merchant, had a similar experience. He offered butter at 4c a roll that cost him 50c and failed to sell it. What is the matter?

Peter Jochimsen has a lot of fine hacon and hams he made from hogs he raised. He has also slaughtered several beaver this winter. Mr. Jochimsen always has something nice to sell, has fewer things to buy than most farmers. The new time table of the mail carrier brings him an hour and a half later, arriving here about noon. This is evidently better for Mr. Young, the carrier, and about as well for the patrons of the route.

Tom Lacy and James Eggett are grubbing in dead earnest on a contract for Wm. Ehrck, and they are succeeding well. Mr. Ehrck has a very desirable place which will soon be a valuable one; having 24 acres of growing trees, most of them bearing.

The sea mill at Charley Davis' place is doing good work under the management of Davenport Bros. Lumber is piling up. There are cutting seven or eight thousand feet a day and will be ready for the spring trade.

Enter man with bill.
"Is Mr. Arthur in?"
"No, he's at his tub. Is it some business that I can attend to for him?"
"No, I came to duh him. Can you tell me where he lunches?"
"Just across the street. But you may as well save yourself the trouble of hunting him up. Three men were here with bills this morning, and he stood them all off."
"That's all right. I don't expect to collect anything, but I'll spoil his appetite for him a little."
Exit in direction of restaurant on other side of street.

Notice to Water Consumers.

Applications for water must be filed at the office of Davenport Lumber Co. Upon receiving the application we will inform parties what they may expect. Parties not fully paid up for water received in 1902 need not apply.

Philosophy for the Farmer.

It is better to have an apple tree in the yard than a doctor's office. The first will prevent many resorts to the latter.

The good stock man feeds his calves a little grain at morning and evening. The good breeder is the good feeder. The grain thus fed is money well expended.

The man with the yard-stick has no advantages over the man with the hoe. The man with the hoe moves in the best of society, and there is no reason why he should not be the peer of any man.

Where hand separators are used on the farm and the skimmed milk fed to calves, a little chop or meal will possess an equal or greater feeding value than the butter fat removed by the separator.

The man who deliberately takes a risk where it appears unsafe, has no right to kick if he loses by such transaction. There is a legitimate risk taken in all kinds of crops when they are put in, but doing so on the board of trade has but little legitimacy in it.

The man who sows grain this year, allowing "one grain for the squirrel, one for the crow and two to grow," will have a good stand if his grain is any good at all. The man who knows his grain sows none but what he wants to grow.

It is often remarked that "there is a mutual relation between orchard, clover and pigs." The pigs thrive on the clover and consume all the fallen and wormy fruit; the clover keeps the soil cool, mellow and moist; the trees thrive because of the improvement of the soil and the destruction of the insects.

Some people are so scared at the great outcrop that is threatening all those that they really do not appear on the stage of action long enough to engage in common farming. There is a vast difference in the yield of crops grown while the owner is sitting on a dry goods box in town and those grown by a farmer who is found engaged in cultivating them.—Ex.

Old Testament Longevity.
Sabbath School.

How are we to account for the ages recorded in Genesis of Adam, his sons, and Methuselah? We cannot disregard the teachings of science, nor need we doubt the statement of Holy Writ. Each has divine authority. By what theory can we reconcile the two? Simply that the year, or unit of time, among the early patriarchs differed from that adopted since the Deluge, which has been the calendar months. Hensler, a high authority, shows that "man, probably that the year, till the time of Abraham, consisted of three months only, and that not until the time of Joseph was it extended to twelve months.

"His assertion," says Hensler, "is still higher authority," is to a certain degree confirmed by some of the Eastern nations who still reckon only three months to the year," and besides it would be inexplicable why the life of a man should have shortened three-fourths immediately after the flood. Moreover the recorded ages when the early patriarchs married was about four times the usual age. Again, with the period of Abraham, we find mention of duration of life which can still be attained and which no longer appear extraordinary, especially when we consider the temperate manner in which the patriarchs lived. We think, therefore, that Hensler's view is a correct conclusion when he says that "man can still attain to the same age as ever."

Asides.
Smart set.

A man who dresses younger than his years courts suspicion—or a maid.

Real knowledge is the fruit of the tree of experience.

Truth is unpleasant only in proportion to our guilt.

There is always something suspicious about anything that must be viewed from a broad-minded standpoint.

The difference between the man with the hoe and the man with the rake (off) is a pecuniary matter.

When the public wishes to destroy it first makes ridiculous.

After a man's income is more than $50,000, he finds relatives a nuisance.

Those who withdraw to privacy to change their opinion, would sail, from shore modestly, refuse to embrace opportunity.

The Friendly Hand.

When a man ain't got a cent, an' he's feelin' kinda dark an' heavy, an' won't let the sunshine thru'. It's a great thing, Oh my brethren, for a feller just to lay His hand upon your shoulder in a friendly sort of way!

It makes a man feel curious; it makes the tear drops start; An' you sort of feel a flutter in the region of your heart. You can look up and meet his eyes; you don't know what to say. When his hand is on your shoulder in a friendly sort of way.

Oh, the world's a curious compound, with its honey an' its gall. With its care an' bitter crosses! but a good word after all. An' a good God must have made it—leastwise that's what I say. When a hand rests on my shoulder in a friendly sort of way.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

HOUSEHOLD INFORMATION.

New Inventions and Designs for Indoor Decorations—Handy Kitchen Contrivances.

Art effects in cretonne are by no means new, but it is doubtful if more artistic results were ever obtained by manufacturers than are observable in this year's output. They make one long to turn summer home furnisher just to look at them. A rich creamy tint is the favorite groundwork and upon this effective background appear clusters of roses in hues familiar in nature's handwork and other shadings that are not to be found in any rose garden in the world. The great pink and red roses show up remarkably well, while the blues and the purple blossoms are fully as attractive, if not as natural looking. In some of the pink and green patterns a bowknot of delicate blue is introduced and as the pink is of a faint hue, also, the combination is very pretty and "Frenchy." Edged with lace, these cretonnes make the daintiest of porteries and mantle draperies, to say nothing of couch cushions. For bedroom furnishing in a summer cottage they are ideal for they harmonize beautifully with brass and enameled bedsteads and the light tinted furniture that commands special attention at this season of the year.

To further carry out the idea of completeness and harmony in furnishings, waste baskets and sewing baskets are covered to match the mantle and door drapery and sofa cushions. It is an easy matter nowadays to carry out any desired color scheme to the minutest detail and with inexpensive materials, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

In the housekeeper's realm, new inventions and devices are constantly brought to the front and clever, persuasive "demonstrators" endeavor to impress visitors to the big shops with the merits and desirable features of the new inventions. One of these novelties is a combined condensed milk can opener and holder. The contrivance is made of nickel and, consequently, will not tarnish. The milk can is slipped inside and by pressing the top of the holder at a designated point the cover of the can is opened sufficiently to permit the milk to flow into a spout resembling that of a syrup jug, protected in a similar way by a lid and operated in a similar manner.

The ordinary tin bread or cake box is not the best kind of a receptacle for the family supply of breadstuffs and cake because when it is tightly closed all ventilation is shut off and the contents, bread especially, become soggy. There is a ventilated bread box on the market—the only one of its kind according to the shop folks—and the ventilated portion consists of an oval section, a little over an inch long, punctured with a half dozen or so pin holes. The perforated box costs about as much and a half as the unventilated receptacle.

All sorts of cooking utensils are to be had in nickel and the saucepans of various sizes, the kettles and frying apparatus, make a brilliant array. Nickelware, however, costs a little more than some other varieties.

The secret of always having pot-pie light is not to allow the lid to be removed from the kettle while boiling. It is the cold air striking the dough that makes it heavy.

Stoves or any iron utensils can be kept from rusting when not in use by rubbing them over with a cloth moistened with kerosene.

WASN'T GOING TO THE CIRCUS.

Afraid He Might Break and Start In on an Animal Destroying Expedition.

"I had called at a Kentucky farmhouse for a drink of water about an hour after a traveling circus had passed over the same highway," writes our Southern Gentleman Tramp, "and as the man referred to the elephants and camels I naturally asked if he wasn't going to town to see the performance."

"Not skassly, sah—not skassly," was his prompt reply. "No, sah, it wouldn't do for me to git cius up to them animals."

"You are not afraid of them?" I asked.

"Not a bit, sah."
"But I don't see anything about you to scare them."

"Nothing 'tall sah, but it jest wouldn't do. If I went to that circus I'd take a big drink when I struck the town. Then I'd want another as I was lookin' around 'outside the tent, I'd take a third one as I started in, and I'd likely meet some friend with a bottle who'd offer me a fourth."

"Oh, I see. You mean you'd be too drunk to see the show?"

"No, sah, not 'tall. Them four drinks would be jest 'nuff to make me believe I could lick anything on legs in Kentucky, and what would be the result?"

"You'd get in a fight with somebody and he'd lug you out."

"No skassly, sah—not skassly. I'd simply go for them animals. I'd flop them 'ix elephants on their backs, twist the necks of them four giraffes and knock the humps off them five camels before you could take up 30 cents, and when they come in count up $50,000 damages where would Tom Scott be? I'd like to go, sah—I'd like to go powerful well, but knowing myself as well as I do, and not wishin' to bring about no calamity, I'm goin' to stay right home and hoe corn and let the elephants rear and the camels bump up their humps and be derved to 'em!"

While in New York Prince Henry saw and admired a keyless clock which was in course of manufacture. It was the first timepiece of its kind. The prince ordered one which he will present to his brother, the Kaiser. It will run continuously for a year without change of battery.
