

Hood River Glacier

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1903.

The Hoosier Social.

The Hoosier social held Saturday night at the K. of P. hall was successful to a degree surprising to the Hoosiers themselves. At 6 o'clock supper was called in the dining room, 70 being accommodated at the first table. In all 115 partook of the Hoosier supper. The appearance of T. C. Dallas, dressed in a broad smile and white suit, made everyone hungry for coffee before reaching the table.

Whatever else may be said for or against the Hoosiers, one thing is certain, they are not baneful, and if they came west on account of dyspepsia, Hood River climate has wrought a radical cure. No trace of the disease remains.

After the supper was over all present gathered in the lower room to listen to the literary programme, which occupied about two hours of the evening.

Rev. H. C. Shaffers' welcome address was somewhat labored, although it was enjoyed by all. He did not seem to have his usual flow and easy manner. The evening was not stage fright, for he never gets that way. It was not on account of lack of inspiration from the audience, for everyone was in sympathy with the subject at hand. They were all there for that purpose. It was not meted by an absence of enthusiasm on the part of the speaker, for he seemed to be almost too full for utterance. However, the address made those present claim with pride that they were Hoosiers.

Miss Gladys Hartley and the twelve boys are worthy of mention for the excellent rendition of "Under the Bamboo Tree." Kathryn Hartley's lullaby was fine for the same reason that every exercise here is good; she can't do it in any other way. The harmony of the male quartette was not bad or indifferent, consequently it must have been good. It was just what it was designed to have been, "The Silent Sell." Miss Earl's paper on Indiana is given below.

Historians of today recognize the fact that the history of the world cannot be considered apart from its geography. So I invite your attention for a few minutes to the geography of our native state, to which we are paying tribute this evening.

Indiana lies in the heart of the lake country and Mississippi valley, as well as in the heart of the United States. The hardy, early pioneers and settlers who found the first gateway of the Alleghenies and pierced the forests of Tennessee and Kentucky, carved their way into the forests of southern Indiana. They built the famous forts of Vincennes, and others from which built Wayne, holding their positions through battles which, with the bright victory of General Harrison on the battle field of Tippecanoe, from the traditions of our state.

These early settlers profited much from their location by being a part of the famous "Northwest Territory," whose provisions in the ordinance of 1787 have been the model of legislation for all subsequent territories acquired by the United States.

She was admitted to the Union in 1816. Her boundaries were entered and crossed by the great national road from Washington to St. Louis. Substantial people from the east had their borders and have their attention to her great natural resources. I may mention first of these resources her forests, which gave fuel and timber for early homes. Second, the extraordinary fertile soil of agricultural areas which have been turned into farms that are the garden spots of the United States.

Originally many of these were great swamps. Hoosier ingenuity wrought the change. The great West may boast of her irrigation but Indiana may point with pride to the grandest of ditching and drainage systems. Also, her farms are the jewels in the priceless setting of a system of gravelled, gravelled or macadamized roads and places that our Western states may do well to copy.

Not all Indiana is agricultural. In her southern counties the great bed of stone lifts to the surface in immense quarries. Bedford stone forms the foundations of our cities and the material of structures ranging from capital buildings and Mississippi bridges, to the meaneast ditch culverts, all over the central states.

In the southern counties there are mines rich in soft coal. During the coal famine of the present year these mines have been the benefactors of the suffering hearts of her own state and Chicago.

Eastern Indiana leads the world in its fields of natural gas, and here has sprung the cities of Anderson, Alexandria, Muncie, Marion, Elwood, Tipton, Wabash and others with manufactures innumerable, important among which is the production of glass. I presume every household in town has in her pantry some Indiana Mason fruit jars, and on her lamp an Indiana glass hue, and possibly in her windows Indiana window panes.

Beside these gas wells have sprung the oil wells. Gas runs the factories, oil lubricates the machinery, and the supply from her wells alone is seeking for world markets.

I mention these resources to show what nature has given to people who are alert to discover and utilize. In less than a century of statehood, her citizens have established institutions we are proud to represent. Though she boasts a population of two and a half million, no great cities peer her civilization with their extremes either of wealth or of want.

Indianapolis is remarkable for being the center for a large number of railroads. Travelers cross our state in their journeys from eastern to western coast, from north to south. So central is it, and the railroad facilities so great, Indianapolis has rapidly grown into the title "The City of Conventions."

A northern city, South Bend, is made famous by the Studebaker factories, advertised by its wagon to every town and farming district on the continent. Another northern city, Elkhart, blows its horns through the Kahn musical instruments of every brass band in the country.

Marion, in the east is the location of one division of the national home for soldiers, second in size to the one located at Dayton, Ohio.

Warsaw, on Eagle lake, is the seat of the Winona summer school, which a few years has developed into a modern Chataqua.

The lovers of the turf will think of Terre Haute and its racetrack, as the home of the famous Nancy Hanks, Maude S. and Dan Patch and the scenes of some of their record lowering races.

Indiana's public schools have been recognized by authorities upon education, as model state schools. Her state normal school is recognized in the national education association because of the excellence of its training.

The state university at Bloomington has supplied schools to the east and west with men who have become famous original thinkers in many professions. Purdue university has so developed the sciences of mechanical, civil and electrical engineering, that it has drawn to it students, not only from every state in the Union, but from foreign countries. Besides these state schools, who has not heard of or enjoyed the advantages of De Pauw, Hanover, Earlham, Rose Polytechnic, Notre Dame, Valparaiso, Merom, Vincennes and many other institutions? And not these only lead me to the pleasant consideration of our celebrated men. In the trying ordeal of expansion since the Spanish American war, our government has recognized Dr. W. T. Byam in sending him with suitable corps of Indian trained teachers to organize normal schools of the Philippines and guide the educational interests there.

Benjamin Andrews, Chicago's worthiest superintendent of public schools, was an Indiana man.

For ten years Henry Ward Beecher, the celebrated minister, was pastor of an Indianapolis congregation. A. A. Jones, now a guest in Oregon, is president of the national grange, the organization of agricultural interests.

Mr. and Mrs. Hallman, formerly of La Porte, have been the organizers of eastern kindergarten teachers, and are now in Indian Territory training the Indians.

Paul Dresser has given to music-lovers the beautiful "On the Banks of the Wabash," sung from coast to coast.

Primmer, of Kankakee, and Carleton and Riley, the Hoosier poets, have enriched the literary world with their poems of Indiana lore.

Lew Wallace has become famous through his Ben Hur, Prince of India and other books. His military career in the Mexican and civil wars, as well as his governorship of Utah and ministry to Constantinople are national services.

Maurice Thompson has given us, in "Alec of Old Vincennes," a living picture of the struggles of Indiana's pioneers.

Egleston, the Hoosier preacher, immortalized the early Hoosier school master, while Booth Tarkington in his Gentleman from Indiana portrays another phase of characters produced on Indiana soil.

Who has not laughed with George Ade at the slang which he utilizes in his humorous fables, and McCutcheon in his catchy history preserving cartoons.

Most proudly do we recall that Lincoln's early years were spent in Indiana. Save Kentucky and Illinois no state can claim a nobler life in the service of his country.

The women of our state have not reached eminence by simply being the mothers of great men, but have an able mouthpiece in Helen Gougar the W. C. T. U. and temperance advocate, and later, political speaker.

Colonel Richard Thompson, Governor O. P. Morton and Senator Voorhees, by their statesmanship endeared themselves to Indianians a generation ago.

President Harrison and Vice President Hendricks have enriched the national life of our own generation while such able men as Indiana has now before the nation in the persons of representative Landis and Senators Beveridge and Fairbank, insure a future as brilliant as any state can produce.

And now in conclusion let me say this, that as the eastern states have poured into Indiana substantial citizens and capital upon which to build, so has Indiana contributed her share of citizens and brain power to eastern and western states. No great state or nation has existed, has progressed, but through expansion.

Let us be proud of Oregon, we are loyal to Oregon, nor are we lacking in enthusiasm and ambition for the state of our adoption, when memory takes us back to our Indiana home and we seek to perpetuate her memory by such happy occasions as this.

St. Mark's guild will meet with Mrs. Noah Bone next Wednesday.

William Olsen and Miss Allie Hoff were married at Underwood, Wash., February 12.

L. E. Christman and son B. F. arrived in Hood River last week from Granger, Iowa. Mr. Christman is a cousin of Mrs. Tillman Smith. He comes to Oregon to look for a home in a more congenial climate.

R. H. Weber, fruit commissioner for this district, was in the valley last Friday. Mr. Weber intends making extensive improvements on his place on the East Side.

Miss Mable Riddell, one of Hood River's corps of teachers, spent Saturday and Sunday in The Dalles with her parents, who reside there.

At a meeting held at the Crapper school house last Thursday night to consider the matter of building a hall, it was decided that a telephone system was more necessary at this time, and the erection of a hall was postponed for the present.

The useful knowledge club met on Monday evening at the residence of Mrs. Warren. John Fiske was the author discussed. The club will meet on Monday evening, March 2, at the residence of Professor C. D. Thompson. John G. Holland, the author, will be taken up.

Percy Wells, who works for the Davidson Company, in a fit of absent-mindedness, walked out of the east end of one of their buildings, Saturday, falling a distance of eight or ten feet. The ground being soft where he fell, Mr. Wells sustained no injury, and as soon as he could get himself together went about his work as usual.

Edith McKahn, who is employed on one of the berry box machines at the Davidson Fruit Company's factory, met with a painful accident on last Friday. Whether Edith ran out of berry baskets, and was experimenting on her finger, we are not informed, but be this as it may, it is a painful fact to her that somehow she managed to get one of her fingers where it had no business to be, with the result that the needle went through it. The young lady is now nursing the uncurly member back to its former usefulness.

S. C. Zeigler's Re'nra.

S. C. Zeigler of White Salmon returned last Saturday from his Eastern trip. He visited in the Dakotas and Pennsylvania for two months, escaped the dangers of hot blizzards and railroad smashups and got home in good shape.

He took with him a generous supply of apples to show the Easterners samples of the kind we grow here. His trunk was wrecked by the baggage smasher on the railroads and he lost some of the fruit but saved enough to exhibit in the apple-growing sections of New York and Pennsylvania, where they think they can grow fine apples. He saw no apples during his trip that compared with the same varieties grown at White Salmon and Hood River. Mr. Zeigler's parents are living in Pennsylvania. The father is hale and hearty at the age of 80. He had not seen his parents since leaving his home in Berks county 25 years ago. He had eleven brothers and sisters to visit, besides nieces and nieces, aunts and uncles all he couldn't rest. Pennsylvania can't grow apples to compare with the Hood River country, but when it comes to growing big families, the Quayson state is proverbially prolific. Israel Zeigler, a nephew, came home with Mr. Zeigler and will make his home here and grow up with the country.

The Institute.

Following is the programme for the institute to be held in Hood River next Monday and Tuesday, March 2 and 3: Address of welcome by the mayor, Hon. T. R. Coon. Response by Dr. Jas. Withycombe.

Ocell Notes.

Good thing the citizens have agitated a local phone company, for the little white store, J. R. Crosby and E. T. Edie have just got phones in today. We are now in town.

L. Bradley and Mr. Young of Polk county gave an interesting entertainment here last Sunday evening.

Roswell Shelley returned Monday from a trip to Portland, Salem and Independence, his old home, where he was for 19 years engaged in business on the corner. He reports an excellent time among old friends. The people there are on velvet on account of the big price for hops last season. The Williams valley is charming in many respects but, after all, can't touch Hood River. This is God's country, and we are beginning to realize it. Everywhere down there inquiries were made about Hood River, and many people from there will look us over and some will locate. Come along. We are like a stage coach—always room for one more.

Another newcomer in East Hood River valley, and he is here to stay. John Lawless and wife have a nine-pound boy.

Lon Boyd is ill with the grip at his father's house.

Master Items.

We regret to note the serious illness of James Brown. Dr. Brosius was called and administered medical services during the week. Latest report announces a slight improvement.

Mrs. Ida Hamblin of Pendleton, state organizer for the Royal Neighbors, spent two days in town in a business capacity. Mrs. Hamblin will return in the near future.

Miss Adaline Sellinger is making a protracted visit with friends at Trout Lake.

Miss Mabel Olsen made a brief visit at The Dalles on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Hunter attended the Gobleys' wedding at Hood River last week. Hood River seems to be matrimonially inclined, so reports the county clerk.

Our genial agent, A. Gibert, has returned after resting for a short period on his ranch at Pine Flat.

Messrs. Fredburg and Darnelle of Macdonald have been visiting J. P. Carroll and family.

Mrs. John Smith returned home during the week after a protracted stay at The Dalles.

Masters Charles Wyse and James Weidner are reported much better. Both have been ill.

Geo. L. Davenport of Davenport-Thompson Co., Portland, made a transient trip home, returning to Portland Friday.

Mrs. William Johnson and children are visiting at The Dalles.

Gay Cramer of Hood River visited his grandmother at this place last week.

Meessrs. Byerlee, Kennedy, Mason and Bateham of Hood River were in attendance at the fruit growers' meeting here last week.

And now, Mr. Editor, you have our history for this week. Until next, "adieu."

The Indians who came to Sheridan about three weeks ago after the coffin for an old man who was almost dead took the coffin to the black man's house and set it up in the corner. The old man got out of bed, went into the room where the coffin was, looked it over thoroughly and nodded his head in approval and went back to bed satisfied with the selection his friends had made for him, and he was fully prepared to enter the happy hunting ground; but from that time on he began to get better until now he is up and doing his own chores; but he has the satisfaction of knowing that when his time comes to die, his coffin is already bought. The old man is 106 years old.—Sheridan Sun.

Teacher—What is a farm? Bright Little Girl—A piece of land entirely covered by a mortgage.

Correct. Now what is a mortgage? It is something lots of people are trying hard to secure and are sorry when they get it.
