John Groff of Mount Hood made proof on his homestead before United States Commissioner George T. Prather, Saturday. Mr. Groff has been in Hood River three years. His land lies eight miles from Cloud Cap Inn, where he has 20 acres or more cleared ground and an orchard planted. He is just now bringing in his first strawberries, and expects to be picking until the first of August. Last summer, Mr. Groff had potatoes planted between the rows of apple trees. He failed to get them dug before the heavy snow in November. After the thaw in January he says he dug the potatoes and found only a few of them frost bitten. The rest were firm and solid and of good quality. Snow fell again during February, and he says that there were fresh snow falls for 28 days out of the 29.
