

A MODERN ALCHEMIST.

Sir William Ramsay and His Scientific Achievements.

The transmutation of the baser metals into gold was the aim of the alchemists of the middle ages, and it was their experiments in the hope of effecting this result that led to the foundation of the modern science of chemistry. The discovery of the distinguished British chemist, Sir William Ramsay, now on a visit to the United States, that the new element known as radium may be changed through its gaseous emanation into another element, helium, has caused wonder whether, after all, the ancient alchemists were so impractical as they were long thought. Sir William has been receiving many attentions from American scientists during his visit, and much curiosity regarding his learned researches and their results has been expressed. He is regarded as one of the foremost authorities on the subject of radio activity and is honored as the discoverer of five new elements—helium, neon, krypton, xenon and ar-

gon. The discovery of the element in the atmosphere known as argon was made in collaboration with Lord Rayleigh. Xenon is another atmospheric element, and it is so rare that only one part of it is to be found in 70,000,000 parts of air. Sir William says that, though the transformation of one element into another does suggest a sort of modern alchemy, nevertheless scientists have not yet been able to produce any of the commoner elements unless an exception be made of lead.

Sir William Ramsay was born in Glasgow in 1852 and was educated at Glasgow university and at Tübingen. He has been professor of chemistry at University college, London, for seventeen years. He is an officer of the French Legion of Honor and a member of numerous learned societies.

THE RICH MRS. WALKER.

Worth Sixty Millions, but Works Hard and Has No Extraneous Habits.

Mrs. Anne M. W. Walker of Philadelphia is worth about $60,000,000 and is the richest woman in America, with the possible exception of Mrs. Hetty Green. As such she is a character of interest. But she is a remarkable woman in more respects than one. When her father, the late William Weightman, the great chemical dealer of Philadelphia and the richest man in Pennsylvania, left his entire fortune and the management of his extensive business interests to his daughter, he knew just what he was doing. He was confident that she would not abuse the trust reposed in her and that she possessed the requisite business ability and experience to carry on the supervision of the large interests left to her care. She had been his amanuensis from girlhood and his confidant in business affairs. Her husband, the late R. J. C. Walker, formerly a member of congress from Pennsylvania, was prominent in the management of her father's business and a member of the firm of Powers & Weightman. He died in December last. In January the widow became a member of the firm; and on her father's death, at the age of ninety-one, he left her his entire property. She at once assumed the active management of his concerns, and it is her custom to rise at 6 a. m., reach her office in the chemical works at 8 o'clock and spend the entire day in the supervision of the firm's affairs.

She lives simply, and her funds are placed and Napoleonically reticent. She makes generous use of her wealth, is a Roman Catholic and has given much to that church.

When a farmer finds himself ahead a thousand dollars, there is no safer place to invest the money than on his own stock farm. He may profitably use his money by improving the grade of his stock, by remodeling his home, by traveling to see and learn how other men make their farms pay better than does his—in other words, so use the money as to make his own farm a model, up to date place in all particulars. Money so invested will pay more than he will be likely to make out of any wildcat speculations in farm real estate.

The Widow in India.

No institution of India has been so exaggerated as that of the widow. She really occupies a place analogous to our antique old maid, now so fast disappearing in the girl bachelor. The aged widow who has remained true to her principles is regarded as a holy being who has withstood a thousand temptations and persecutions and commands the respect of a saint from all persons. She is the mother of all the children in the neighborhood, the helpmate of all the neighbors. At evening they flock around to hear her repeat the ancient legends, the stories of Sita and Savitri, Draupida, or sing the songs of Mira Bai. She is in great demand when cooking is needed for a sacred feast. She teaches the little ones their first hymns and prayers. She nurses the sick, comforts the dying. She believes herself to be a saint and her husband for everlasting time through all births and deaths. The momentary separation here is but one shade of her marriage, an unknowable mystery of destiny. It breaks no tie—Everybody's Magazine.

Helping a Composer of Music.

Haley was somewhat of a pedant in writing music. He worked very slowly and deliberately and made hundreds of changes before he was satisfied. When ideas would not come at his bidding he employed a very singular means to help his genius along. A kettle filled with water was put over a fire, and the monotonous singing of the boiling water acted as a wonderful stimulant on his imagination. While composing, his brother, Leon Haley, was always with him, dictating the verses of the text and adding and scratching syllables wherever it was necessary. For this reason he was called "text surgeon" among his friends. Leon Haley was by no means a prepossessing man, and the poet Heine is responsible for the following description of him: "He looks as if his brother had composed him."

Blunders by Novelists.

Novelists, even of eminence, are prone to make blunders. Sir Walter Besant, in "For Faith and Freedom," wrote after the Erykhs had settled in Providence, "Barthyn soon grew tired of this quiet life and went on board a steamer bound for England, promising that we should hear from him." This was in 1868 or 1867, and the first steamer from America to this country did not reach Liverpool till July, 1819. Wilkie Collins also made numerous amazing blunders. In "The Duel in Herne Wood" he makes the story open with the receipt of a telegram, and the period is 1817, when twenty years had to elapse before the first telegraphic wire was laid. Three of the characters also talk of "stating the express train to London" in defiance of the fact that the first railway to London was not opened till 1825.

Nelson's Mishap.

This is an entry from the Journal of the surgeon of the British warship Thetis (the dates are from July and August, 1797): "July 24 and 25—Admiral Nelson. Compound fracture of the right arm by a musket ball passing through a little above the elbow, an artery divided, the arm was immediately amputated and the following given him: R. Op. et J. R. Ft. statim. s. e. etc. 26 July—Rested pretty well, and quite easy. Tea, soup and sago. Lemonade and Tama and Drink. 31 July—One of the ligatures came away; looks well. 1 August—Continued getting well very fast; stump looked well, no bad symptoms, sore reduced to the size of a shilling."

Smuggler's Book.

One of the devices of the smuggler is to bring in rifles, watches and other compact articles of value concealed in books. A thick, innocent looking volume is selected for the purpose, and a hole is hollowed out in the center large enough to receive the smuggled goods. The book is then closed and tied up. Its weight offers no clue to the presence of the valuables, even if the inspector should take it in his hand, and a book is of course likely to pass muster even with the most careful customs agents.

Rode to a Sure Death.

Jacques de Chastel, bishop of Soissons, had accompanied Louis IX. (St. Louis) on the African crusade, and finding that nothing had been accomplished and that the army was about to return in disgrace to France, refused to go, took leave of his friends partook of the sacrament, mounted his horse fully equipped for battle and, in sight of the whole army, charged alone into the Saracen camp, where he was at once cut to pieces.

A Discard.

He-Ha! Absurd things those "Battledore Ballads." Eh! What? She—I'm sorry you think so—my sister wrote them! He—Er—of course, I don't mean the words—they're ripping. I mean the music—poor stuff—spoils words—composer ought to be kicked—who wrote it? She—I did! (Awkward silence)—Punch.

Disappointed.

Clarence had been looking forward eagerly to his sixth birthday, and when it came his sister woke him up early in the morning.

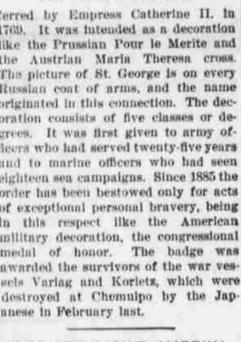

Remembered the Places.

In the days of his youth, "befo' de wah," it had been the privilege of Uncle Eph Slater to attend his master as body servant upon several extended journeys. To mention the name of another town or locality was enough to start him on his reminiscences, and so jealous did he grow of his reputation as a traveler that he always declared he had visited the place in question whether he had or not.

THE CROSS OF ST. GEORGE.

Russian Military Decoration Recently Conferred on Our Heroes.

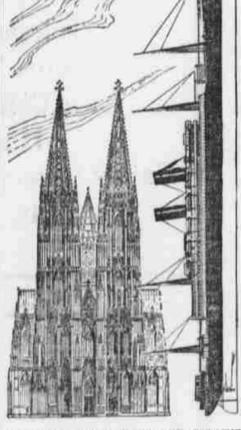

The cross of St. George, which has been given soldiers and sailors of the Russian army and navy who have shown special bravery in the war with Japan, is the highest military decoration of Russia and was first conferred by Emperor Catherine II. in 1769. It was intended as a decoration like the Prussian Pour le Merite and the Austrian Maria Theresa cross. The picture of St. George is on every Russian coat of arms, and the name originated in this connection. The decoration consists of five classes or degrees. It was first given to army officers who had served twenty-five years and to marine officers who had seen eighteen sea campaigns. Since 1855 the order has been bestowed only for acts of exceptional personal bravery, being in this respect like the American military decoration, the congressional medal of honor. The badge was awarded the survivors of the war vessels Variaz and Korietz, which were destroyed at Chumupoi by the Japanese in February last.

THE STEAMSHIP AMERIKA.

How It Compares in Length With Height of Cologne Cathedral.

The new steamship Amerika of the Hamburg-American line is to be one of the largest vessels afloat, and is placed on end by the side of the towers of the Cologne cathedral in Germany.

many would overlook the highest points of the cathedral towers by nearly 100 feet. The Amerika was built as a passenger and freight steamer, and its dimensions are 675 feet in length by 76 in width and 63 in depth. It has a registered tonnage of 23,500 and will accommodate 570 first cabin passengers, 300 second cabin, 280 third cabin and 2,000 steerage.

THE SPHINX OF WALL STREET.

Edwin Hawley, the Railroad King, Famed For Secretiveness.

"I have struck to business and never permitted the grass to grow under my feet," said Edwin Hawley, the railroad king, when asked the secret of his business success recently. Mr. Hawley's feat in wrestling control of the Chicago and Alton road from the famous financier E. H. Harriman was quite a surprise to Wall street and demonstrated what power he has now attained in the railroad world. Mr. Hawley was born at Chatham, N. Y., in 1850. He came to New York a workman in a country lad and went to work in an office at a salary of $10 per week. The late C. P. Huntington gave him his start in railroad manipulation, and he has done credit to his instructor in railroad finance. He is known in Wall street as "the sphinx."

It will pay any farmer big money to give a trolley company a free right of way across his farm.

A friend had a very choice fern which he kept in his store, and fearing that it would be hurt by frost during an excessively cold night he placed it in a tight showcase as a precaution, with a small lamp in one corner of the case. When he came to the store in the morning he found his fern ruined, not by the frost, but by the burning out of all the oxygen in the air in the case. Plants breathe just as men do, and air is just as indispensable to their existence.
