CHAPTER XXV.

"Saakala, will you become my wife?"

By his deathbed confession Seadog had placed the ownership of the fisheries largely in Sankala, and the town site npon which the homes were built practically belonged to Dan Lapham. The Seadogs were expected to fight for a share in these and a long drawn out course of litigations was expected, with possibly the closing of the cannery and the suspension of fishing until the matter should be settled.

The people now claimed supremacy in advancement and superiority of summer resorts. "Seaside" on the south claimed it was the best on the coast.
"Long Beach" on the Parific.

they have drifted.

Barring the legal complications which had arisen from Seadog's death, however, the fishermen had cause to rejoice. The man had always been a tyrant. He had borne down upon them with a meriless hand. Under no change of masters could they expect anything but

To lift the gloom which hung over the village, only required a settlement of the legal complications and a permission for the men to return to their work.

and a permission for the men to return to their work.

Old Bumbo, the lawyer, was the only stumbling block in the way. He advised that Sankala close down the traps and turn every Seadog living out into the world empty-handed. He would have had Dan Lapham enforce his title to the towards and become a landlard. to the townsite and become a landlord as merciless as those painted in fiction. as merciness as those partied in factors.

Bumbo had lived from band to mouth by petty ligitation for years, had endred the insults of the toilers who had no respect for the man who made his scanty living by his wits, and between him and the scadogs there was an antip-athy bitter as a Southern fued. "While it would appear from the confession of the late Mr. Seadog that the bulk of the property could be won out through the courts, I am opposed to taking this course. I am willing to a division which should be satisfactory to all persons interested. Dan—Mr. Lap-ham, expressed himself in the same spirit with me."

"That is correct," said the young "Old Bumbo was indignant. He walked the floor like a caged animal. He took Sankala aside and remonstrated, but it was all without avail. The Seadogs were completely surprised. After the terrible confession of the elder member of the family they felt that all was lost. They expected no money from the representative of the outraged Saarela and under Sankala's charitable views of the matter they immediately melted into a friendliness

> CHAPTER XXVI. After Twenty Years.

A steamboat was gliding down the Columbia. It was crowded with passengers, gaily dressed in summer attire.

Children were running about the Louise Brosius, deck playing and shouting. A band dispersed music in the large dining Lauona Moore, room. Lovers were talking silly, just as they always do on steamboats. Men Ellen Moses, were playing cards and drawing at their were playing cards and drawing at their cigars in the smoking room. Local passengers were pointing out the important landmarks along the river and relating Earl Moses,

It was the second morning after the double funerel. The fishermen generally were downcast. It is true that the trouble regarding the fisheries had been settled, but the property rights of the northside industry had assumed the northside industry had assumed the northside industry had assumed the southside and northside fishermen at the mouth of the river. Time has wrought its great changes here as at other points in the great Pacific Northwest. Popular summer resorts had been built up on the beach of the ocean on the south and north sides of the rown. Clarrisra Davenport, Lora Sherrib, west. Popular summer resorts had been built up on the beach of the ocean on the south and north sides of the river. Great crowds flocked to these points every year. The rivalry of the olden times still existed. It was not over the fishing industry now for that over the fish of the rown.

"Long Beach" on the north claimed it was the "Long Beach" of the Pacific. The boat was steaming for the north side resort. It was the pride of its owners and the idol of its crew. It cut the water like a knife and rode the waves with the stateliness of a queen.

In beautiful golden letters it bore th

name "Sankala."

The boat had just rounded the uppe point of sand island. A middle age man and woman were seated side by sid on the upper deck looking out ever the water. They were casually conversing about the different landmarks along the island and north shore. "Do you remember that place?"

quired the man as the boat glided by the ruins of an old fish trap. "Yes," replied the woman, "that was about where I was when the southsiders

"You are right," replied the man.
"We were off here to the left when I seized his gun. It was too late to save you from the wound, but you know it is a hobby of mine to claim that I saved your life."

The couple went on discussing matters familiarly as the boat steamed across the river to the north shore. "Do you see that man and woman" inquired a citizen to a tourist whom he had met on the boat. "Well, they have a history in this portion of the world this boat is named for the woman. world this boat is named for the woman. Her maiden name was Sankala Saarela. Her present name is Lapham. That is her husband sitting by heside. They own large properties of the beach but make their home I the city. They have a summer home of the beach and come down every year. This is their first trip this serson.

child. "A war arose between the north side and south side fishermen when the girl was nearly 20 years old and she being familiar with the river life took part with the northsiders and during the excitement, when a boat load of soldiers had arrived and a treacherous pilot had jumped overboard in a storm, seized the wheel and took the soldiers to the rescue of her friends, and though she was wounded while guiding the boat did not make it known until after the riot had been quelled.

"As a remarkable coincidence old mar Seadog was wounded in the same fight and died from the effects of his wound, but not until he had made restitution of the property coming to the girl.

"It was a case of a girl making a woman of herself and also making a man of a common fisherman. When the girl came into her property she compelled that was surprising for a Seadog. Even her suitor, her present husband, to wait the Humilated Hazel looked kindly upon until she could obtain an education and to also obtain one himself before she would marry him."

As the boat swung around against the wharf a man and his wife were there to welcome them.

"Dear Hazel is as pretty as ever," said Mrs. Lapham.
"And Budlong still retains his soldierly bearing," replied her husband.

THE END.

Dan, who were under age, consummating the agreement and old Bumboo was ordered to prepare the papers.
