"Ben-Hur" Is Scheduled for Portland.

General Lew Wallace's mighty and stirring romance of "Ben-Hur", brilliantly reviving the days of the Messiah on the stage, which scored such a success in Portland two years ago, is to be again enacted in that city at the Marquam Grand theatre for six nights and matinees, beginning Sunday, starting October 8. Special matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday during the week.

Although dealing with the most delicate subject in the history of the stage, the production of "Ben-Hur" from its inception has met with high praise from the most religiously sensitive, has earned the endorsement of the clergy and people in every community in securing "Ben-Hur," preparations needs to be made to it as a series of magnificent pictures illustrating the scenes of the Messiah on earth. The most conspicuous scenes in the spectacle are "the Star of Bethlehem," "the City of Jerusalem" from the terrace garden of the Palace of Hur in Jerusalem, "the interior of a Roman galley," "the Grove of Daphne," "the Fountain of Castalia," "the exciting Roman Chariot Race," "the Valley of Hinnom," and "the Mount of Olives." All are remarkable exhibitions of the best scenic art. To these are added some wonderful effects in electric lighting, as in "the Star of Bethlehem," where over 25,000 electric lights of 32 candle power are used to furnish its powerful ray.

In order that the public of this vicinity may have an opportunity to enjoy this stupendous stage offering, all the railroad lines running into the city of Portland are to make special low excursion rates for a radius of 250 miles.

NO ONE MAN WILL NAME NEXT TICKET

M. P. Isenberg, the wheel horse of many a political campaign in Wasco and other counties of Oregon, and a prominent figure at each session of the legislature, is confined to his room under the care of a physician, but found time the other day to express himself concerning the proposed peace conference of the republican leaders.

Mr. Isenberg doesn't believe there can be any radical changes made through this conference, and is satisfied the members of the good old party will put up the right sort of men when they enter the booths at the primary elections next April.

"Before making a statement on the subject," remarked Mr. Isenberg, "I want to say to you that I am sick in bed and forced to take some of the most nauseous medicines that the brain of the doctor can concoct. I am improving under the treatment, but that doesn't change the taste of the medicine. The doctor says it is my liver that is out of order. The neighbors and my family encourage me by telling me I have every symptom of typhoid fever, and that most cases of that disease taken at my age prove fatal. These things, taken into consideration with the fact that I have never had any practice in being sick and having to lie in bed, may account for my following statements, if they appear to be out of harmony with a harmonious meeting.

"First, there is no question, in my opinion, of the good intention of Mr. Baker in issuing this call, and the fact that he has issued it with his knowledge of the work of these 'leaders' is proof positive that they have been working out of harmony, thereby bringing about the present condition of state affairs. The world is visiting our state of enormous republican majority to be received by a democratic governor. This is said with all due respect for the Hon. Geo. E. Chamberlain, who is certainly an excellent man, with nothing to criticise except his political faith.

"Well, my opinion is that where a man gains the confidence of the voters to the extent that he can influence them to follow his leadership and then because he fails to carry his wishes into effect, goes into the enemy's camp and with his followers defeats the party's nominees, that man or men should not meet Mr. Baker in a public gathering, but should call on him privately, make an appropriate contribution to the coming campaign fund, and have Mr. Baker, who is a good-sized man, thoroughly kick his pants, then go away back and sit down until the morning of the election, and surprise himself by voting on principle for the party of his choice, thereby becoming an American citizen in fact for the first time. But if they prefer a peace convention, I have no objection.

"It is the leaders who are called together. This must refer to have been leaders. They have now lost their commissions. There is no individual, or set of individuals who will nominate the next ticket. There will be no unit rule to favor any special candidate. There will be no caucus nominations outside of the convention hall which will extend to the boundary of the state. The election board will be the committee on credentials with the registration of the legal voters in their possession. Even the privilege of reading to a convention of cheering delegates the time honored resolution: 'We point with pride, etc,' will have to be forfeited under this new regime. The thought of all this almost induces me to take an extra dose of that miserable-tasting medicine, and I am no leader.

"But it is my opinion that when a republican ticket is selected by this method with the majority of of republicans that are in this state, it will be elected, conference or no conference. I have not heard of any one in Hood River having received a special invitation to attend that 'conference.' There is no reason that they should attend it. We are in harmony."

For fear that some one might take advantage of his present helpless condition, Mr. Isenberg wishes to state that he is positively not a candidate for governor. "There are only a few of us left in the state who are not in the race," says he. "Some of these will have to fill the other official positions, and I have partly promised Asa Stogsdill to help with the assessment. The fact is, I will not be a candidate. This statement is final and will not be reconsidered. There has been no serious movement in line so far, that I know of, but I am "taking time by the fetlock."

MORNING BLAZE ON THE HEIGHTS

TWO BUILDINGS ARE CONSUMED

Jochimsen Confectionery and Bateham Hall Destroyed by Fire on Last Sunday

Fire originating from an unknown source destroyed the H. F. Jochimsen confectionery store and the Bateham building on the heights, early Sunday morning. But for the efficient work of a bucket brigade, who secured their water from the big ditch of the Farmers' Irrigating Co near at hand, other buildings would have added fuel to the flames. To the efficient service of this voluntary brigade is due the fact that the store buildings of J. H. Gill and H. M. Abbott are still standing.

The blaze broke forth in the rear of the Jochimsen store about 4:30 o'clock, and in a few minutes enveloped the room containing the faucet. Had it been possible to attach a hose, the fire might have been extinguished where it started with but little damage. The neighborhood was soon aroused, but no one could find buckets, hose or ladders with which to keep the flames from spreading to the Bateham building. Slowly the flames crept along the eaves of the hall, but there was no way to reach them.

The chemical engine reached the scene about an hour after the fire had been discovered, too late to be of assistance. The boys, though, did good work passing water buckets to those on the ladders, and by keeping the roofs of the adjoining buildings saturated with water the spread of the flames was stayed.

Burning embers fell about the heads of the bucket brigade thick and fast, but the lads stuck to their post, and saved thousands of dollars' worth of property. Lucky it was that the irrigation ditch ran full of water.

The confectionery business of Mr. Jochimsen was insured for $650, which will come very near covering his loss. Fred Larwood owned the building, which was covered with $200 insurance. The Bateham building was valued at $1800, and was covered with $1000 insurance.

The furniture in the Bateham hall was the property of the Baptist church, and was all saved but some goods and furniture in the second story belonging to Mrs. Bacon, who is absent in the hop fields, was destroyed with a loss of probably $100.

J. H. Gill was one of the first to telephone news of the fire to town. Marshal Olinger was aroused, and he at once hunted up members of the fire department, and secured some one to ring the bell of the Congregational church. By this time half of the town was aroused and hurried to the scene of the conflagation.

By 7 o'clock the flames had subsided and the crowd dispersed to their several homes.

"The fire will doubtless make new business for the insurance agents," remarked Mr. Bateham, "and many were heard discussing the advisability of having fire apparatus on the heights."

SAYS WALNUTS ARE PROFITABLE CROP

During the past decade especially, the walnut industry has taken a firm hold in certain sections of the Pacific coast and farmers are gradually coming to recognize it as one of the greatest of commercial enterprises, says a writer in the Pacific Homestead

Walnut trees cannot be grown in all parts of our country, and it is in only a few sections that they can be grown successfully from a commercial standpoint. The state of Oregon and parts of Washington and California in certain sections lying between the Cascades and the coast are especially adapted to their culture.

The planting of an orchard of English walnut trees today is no more an experiment, but in Oregon, especially in the section named above, has been proven to be a great source of revenue.

At the present time the state of California probably outstrips Oregon in its acreage of walnut orchards, but it is an established fact that this state produces larger yields per tree than does California and in that state some of the very highest priced land is given over to the culture of the English walnut and has made independently rich many of those who have taken up this most important industry.

Given proper cultivation and care, English walnut trees become producers to a small extent at five years of age. The first crop will not be a largely remunerative one, but it increases each year, trees at the age of thirteen, years often producing from eighty to ninety pounds annually and it is a common thing for orchards of from fifteen to seventeen years giving returns of from $500 to $750 per acre.

The English wanlut tree is not short lived. It attains a prodigious age and produces an ever increasing yield up to a great age. Records of early botanical writers speak of this tree as producing one hundred thousand nuts, of growing to a size of fifteen to twenty feet in circumference. Such yields and sizes, however are rare.

As an ornamental tree and for shade the walnut cannot be beaten. It grows rapidly, has large leaves and statistics show that it is attacked by fewer insects and fungus diseases than any other variety. The timber of the walnut is also a very remarkable product, the market price being often as high and even higher than $300 per M.

During the first few years after planting, the ground in and around the trees can be utilized for the successful production of small growing stuffs, peas, strawberries, potatoes, and the like.

Walnut producing territory is limited, practically the only section of the United States where they can be raised successfully being along the Pacific coast, as shown by records in the United States Board of Horticulture.
