HOOD RIVER DAY AT FAIR

tion period in the matter of size. Hood River day at the exposition proved a big occasion. Everyone of the excursionists was at the grounds by 10 o'clock and everyone else at the fair knew Hood River was in evidence. Not by noisy demonstrations or gaudy banners or big parades, music and speecmaking, but through a display of unstinted liberality and hospitality. Exactly 8000 fine apples were given away, and there is no elsewhere that reaches exhibition crowds quite so readily or quite so fully as do presents of fine fruit.

It had been intended to hold exercises at the Wasco county booth, and a program had been prepared, but at the last moment this was done away with in order to expedite the distribution of famed Hood River apples. From 11 a. m. until well along in the afternoon three attendants were busy handing out apples. The crowd that claimed this offering was built on the order of a phalanx. No sooner would the front of the line drop out burdened with apples than others would immediately take their place. The distribution was supervised by E. L. Smith and E. W. Shepard of Hood River.

While the excursion was organized by the Hood River Commercial club, every citizen of the place and every resident of Hood River valley seemed to consider himself a part of the promotion committee. For many days past the coming day at the fair has been the prime topic of conversation. And it was not talk, for people up Hood River way have a commendable pride in their section of the globe, and thus the greatest excursion of the exposition was organized.

While a goodly percentage of the visitors came from the town, the attendance from the country was heavy. At daylight yesterday morning the roads leading to Hood River were filled with conveyances of every description. There were buglies, lumbering farm wagons, saddle horses and carts, all bearing their burdens of loyal humanity. A few determined ones came on foot. The O. R. & N. company made them a liberal rate—about enough to pay for express and the conductor's salary. The first excursion train was filled quickly, leaving a multitude to follow later.

Many of the visitors returned home on the evening train, although a large number remained over for today and Portland day. These are making the Wasco county booth, in the Agricultural palace, their headquarters.

MR. CRAIG SENDS THANKS FOR BADGE

The beautiful Hood River souvenir badge, worn by Hood River people in Portland last Thursday, has won compliments from many quarters, and here is one from A. L. Craig, the general passenger agent of the Harriman lines in Oregon. The badge was sent to Mr. Craig by E. H. Shepard, manager of the fruit unions in this city, who has received the following letter from Mr. Craig:

"Portland, Oregon, Sept. 28, 1905.—Mr. E. H. Shepard, Manager Hood River Fruit Growers' Union, Hood River, Oregon. Dear Sir: Thank you very much for copy of the Hood River badge. I think it is an exceedingly attractive one, and congratulate you and the Hood River people upon having gotten up so attractive an article.

"One of the California Commissioners was in the office a few moments ago and said Hood River was all over the fair grounds and was making a great showing today. I am sure that your effort to make so good a showing for the Hood River section will be entirely satisfactory. I took some eastern friends to see the Wasco county exhibit in the Horticultural building yesterday, and they were delighted with what they saw there.

"With kindest regards, I am Sincerely yours,
A. L. CRAIG."

Acknowledges Receipt of Badge.

Mr. Shepard, who sent souvenir Hood River badges to a large number of Hood River people, among them R. M. Hall, advertising agent of the Harriman lines in Oregon, A. L. Craig, general passenger agent; R. B. Miller, general freight agent; Jefferson Myers, president of the state commission; H. W. Goode, president of the exposition, and E. C. Giltner, secretary to President Myers, has received this letter from Mr. Myers:

Portland, Sept. 28, 1905.—E. H. Shepard, Hood River, Oregon. My dear sir: Please accept my very kind thanks for your kind remembrance of one of Hood River's very beautiful badges. Yours very truly,
JEFFERSON MYERS,
President.

Extends Thanks for Fine Apples.

A. I. Mason, an apple grower of the East Side and formerly one of the Portland letter carriers, has received the following letter from a committee of Multnomah branch No. 82 of the National Association of Letter Carriers, whom it will be remembered were present with a half dozen boxes of Hood River apples, each one wrapped in silk handkerchiefs, appropriately labeled, at the time of the national convention in Portland last month:

Portland, Oregon, Sept. 26, 1905.—Mr. A. I. Mason, Hood River, Oregon. Dear Sir: Branch No. 82, National Association of Letter Carriers wishes to extend to you, and through you, to your associates in the Hood River Fruit Growers' association, its most hearty and sincere thanks and appreciation for the gift of the six boxes of beautiful and expensive apples which was presented to the delegates in attendance at our last National Convention in this city, September 4th to 10th, 1905; also for the suitable wrappers upon the apples purchased of you.

The apples were very highly prized by our visitors, and aided us very materially in the way of refreshments and entertainment.

Always wishing for you continued success in your undertaking, we are, Yours very respectfully,
Harry E. Coleman,
president.

Sacajawea—Jaww—Jaww!
Apples and strawberries we do go o!
Who are we? You can guess—
Hood River, Hood River; yes, yes, yes.

With sprits as high as the price of their Spitzenberg apples, more than 1000 enthusiastic Hood River boomers swept into Portland this morning on a special train of a dozen cars. When they rolled into the Union depot it seemed for a moment as though bedlam had broken loose. The yell, in which Sacajawea figures for the first time, along with apples and strawberries, was given with a vim that roused the North End inhabitants.

Hundreds of school children accompanied the excursion, given in honor of Hood River day at the exposition. The children were put aboard two large floats at the spot. On these was the appropriate inscription, "My dear fruit, you shall know them, and it was a sight that would have driven from the presidential mind all thought that race suicide is imminent in Oregon.

With Roswell Shelby, mounted marshal of the day, whose uniform was a khaki suit, a campaign hat and a sash of red Hood River apples, leading the way, the Hood River Chamber of Commerce members following the two float loads of children, the procession started up Sixth street and they made the welkin ring "Ned" Blythe, of the Hood River Glacier, and R. M. Hall, advertising agent to the O. R. & N., were the leaders in the yell, and assisted by the two loads of youngsters Sixth street was a lively scene for several minutes.

The procession moved up Sixth street to the central part of town, then down to First street, where special cars carried them to the exposition grounds. This is the largest representation from any Oregon town since the exposition opened. Unfortunately only a comparatively few were in the parade, and this served to make the representation appear much smaller than it was really. There were 1015 excursionists aboard the train and over 200 came down by boat yesterday.

The members of the Chamber of Commerce wore apple sashes and all the excursionists were letter initiates of the Hood River apple. Many carried apple sticks with a large red apple on the upper end.

The excursionists were met at the depot by Marion Dolph, representing the Exposition.

To the music of the Administration band, an led by a great banner depicting the course of the fertile Hood River valley, the "boaters" marched around the exposition grounds as soon as they reached there. The banner, which elicited much praise, is the work of W. R. Winsor, of Winsor City, a small town in the Hood River Valley.

Hood River Day at the Fair.

Portland Journal Editorial.

About 60 miles east of Portland and sloping from the north side of Mount Hood to the Columbia river is a valley lying on both sides of Hood river, that has gained world wide reputation on account of its fruit, particularly its apples and strawberries. A quarter of a century ago its inhabitants were few; now they number several thousands, and there is no more prosperous, contented community in the country. The early settlers there discovered that the soil and climate were particularly adapted to the raising of these fruits, others went in there and joined the pioneers in this occupation, and now scores of carloads of strawberries are shipped from there every summer, while the Hood River apples are celebrated not only in all large American cities, but in Europe, across the Pacific, bringing, it is said, the highest price paid for apples in the world.

Once an orchard is in bearing it is a very profitable, frequently netting the grower $200 or $300 an acre annually and occasionally much more than this. Other products can be and are raised there; the soil is rich, timber and water are plentiful; a few acres is all that a man needs to support a family; and there is room there for thousands more. It has been estimated that not more than one-tenth the area of Hood River valley is yet fully utilized. The stream of that name and others furnish abundant water power, and there is no reason why this remarkable valley should not in time contain 25,000 or 30,000 people, of which a due proportion will be inhabitants of the flourishing city of Hood River. While western Oregon produces fine apples and other fruits the climate is not such as to give them the delightful tart flavor that makes Hood River and southern Oregon fruits famous. Apple raising is a growing industry in Oregon, and will become a very profitable one, and Hood River valley will continue to be a leading and favorite region in which to pursue this pleasant and profitable occupation. This is Hood River day at the Lewis and Clark exposition, and the good people of that town and valley are here in force. They are not deterred by a little rain; they are used to that; and they are properly proud of their products, which, especially the big red apples, are much in evidence. Eastern people will all, we hope, have an opportunity to test this delicious fruit, and having done so, it is safe to say that they will agree that these apples cannot be excelled. The people of Hood River, though most of them own comparatively small tracts of land, are thrifty, prosperous and progressive. They comprise a wide-awake community such as the whole state can point to with pride and pleasure. They have helped to make the fair a success, and we hope they will enjoy it and profit by it.

Condon Has a Building Boom.

T. S. Weekly returned Monday from Condon, where he has been doing carpentering work for Mr. Orr, who has the contract there for several large buildings, one of them a brick structure.

Mr. Weekly thinks that he will move his family to Condon at least for the winter. Business is booming there since the railroad was completed, and there is considerable of a building boom in the town. Many settlers have moved into the country, and thousands of acres of new land will be put into wheat this fall.

The Condon-Arlington branch operates regular trains, and Mr. Weekly says the road bed is one of the smoothest new roads he ever traveled over. A large amount of wheat is being hauled on the new road. The distance from Arlington to Condon is 40 miles. The trains connect with No. 2, which passes here at 11:43.

Ellery's Band, which has been engaged to play during the closing weeks of the Lewis and Clark exposition, has made the hit of the season. Concerts are given, free to all, twice daily, and are largely attended.
