THE MODERN FLOUR MILL

MANY COMPLICATED MACHINES

Rumbling Stones Hoard No More—

$1,000 Worth of Silk in Plant—

Capacity, 25 Sacks an Hour.

Have you ever been through a flour mill? If you haven't and are contemplating doing so put on your overalls. The Glacier mill went through one recently and when he emerged he had enough flour on his clothes to last his family a week.

However that has nothing to do with the fact that milling has decidedly changed since the days when we were wont to couple the mill with its big rambling mill stones and ponderous water wheel. In its place we have the roller process for making flour, bran, middlings, breakfast foods, etc.

The Cascade Mill in this city is representative of the modern mill of today. It is capable of turning out 25 sacks of flour an hour weighing 50 pounds. The whole wheat is stored in a large bin on the top floor of the mill and runs first through a machine that cleans and sorts it. It then runs through an apparatus that is called a gauging machine which can be set to allow just so many pounds of wheat to pass through it in a minute.

From here it goes to the first set of rollers, there are seven, each one taking off the different products such as bran, middlings, etc., and leaving the finer grades of flour to go on its way to the bolting machine where it passes through 30 silk sieves and is finally sacked in the receiving room on the first floor of the mill. There is over $1,000 worth of silk in this mill with me exactly the same size and it is all made by hand.

In addition to all this the wheat and flour pass through countless spouts and machines for making it as perfect as the ingenuity of man can devise.

Last month this mill filed a contract for 8,000 sacks of flour for export and this month has begun to fill another one or the same amount. It is interesting to note that this flour goes to Japan and is known in the mill as the Red Horse brand on account of the fact that it cannot be distinguished in any other way, as the bag containing it is covered with Japanese characters printed in red ink which the mill hands are unable to decipher. Two horses rampant, appear on the center of the bag, hence the name, Red Horse.

This firm also manufactures Graham flour, farina, whole wheat, corn meal and other breakfast foods put up in ten pound sacks.

To install this plant cost $25,000 and the quality of the flour is said to be equal to that made anywhere in the world.

The firm of Stranahan & Sheets is also doing large flour and feed business in Hood River and although there have been no mill here they did more business during the past month than they have at any time since the firm has been in existence. Their business is wholesale exclusively and is confined every day to Hood River and outlying territory and is known in the mill as the Red Horse brand on account of the fact that it cannot be distinguished in any other way, as the bag containing it is covered with Japanese characters printed in red ink which the mill hands are unable to decipher.
