The Wrong Kind of Patriotism.

Patriotism has always been thought to be a fairly good virtue by men who have given the subject some thought. Some years ago a statesman who was noted for his advocacy of principle in preference to the almighty dollar delivered an address on this subject. His ideas were ones which called for the loval adherence not only to the flag under which a man was born and Gribble spoke at length on the nee in which he resided.

no doubt admirable, it is to the latter that any town or city must look for success. loyalty to your home town and the people that live in it. The ness with which its residents have of work alone would keep one man worked together on all important busy. The ranchers will go far toissues. Further success necessarily means that this spirit must continue. An issue is now before the residents had been done towards building a of Hood River and surrounding territors to ship every lovel man will retory to which every loyal man will re- hill.
