In order to accomplish the best result in any line of business, it is necessary first of all to study the wants and taste of the consumer, of the man who pays you his cash for your goods. The same kind of a product may have to be put up in a different markets; all those details must be studied continuously in order to different markets; all those details must be studied continuously in order to get the best returns for your products.

Williams, the baker, asked permission to make repairs to his residence and bakery, and aroused considerable discussion,

Our Newtowns today are bringing on the English market more than any other apple. Why do they bring more money? Because our fruit is fancy, our pack houest, our package neat. But competition is growing keener every year. Thousands of acres will come into bearing from now on between Southern Oregon in the south to Canada in the north, and they are sil striving to put a better pack on the market from year to year. We therefore must keep pace with them, and manage to be ahead of the procession just a little all the time.

In regard to quality, we have nothing to fear. But other sections can pack their fruit just as well as we do, they can buy just as nice a box and label as we can. It is therefore up to us to improve our methods a; every opportunity in putting up fancy fruit for the man that pays us the fancy price. Our Newtowns today are bringing certain variety of apples, that he could buy the same variety at 35 cents less per box in the state across the river (which, by the way, was a variety or apples we were selling at 85 cents per box). Upon being a sked why he did not buy them when he could secure them at such a bargain, he replied, "I can make more money on your fruit at 85 cents than I could on the other at 50 cents, tecause I am sure of the grade and pack," and he bought all we had to spare.

These conditions have been brought about after years of carefur study of the requirements of the trade, by consciptions of the same time, that all imperfect apples should be removed before undertaking to pack.
