HENRY W. BUTTON LOSES HIS LIFE

The news of the death of Henry Button came as a great shock to this community.

Henry and Willie Chandler started on a fishing trip to Neal creek Monday morning and about 8 o'clock, at 8 o'clock they reached the creek at a point nearly one fourth of a mile from its mouth, and began fishing immediately after catching their lunch for safe keeping.

They fished to a point near the Eggermont ranch. Willie had been fishing in the lead for some distance and as they had fished up the creek for several hundred rods they came together.

Here Henry was standing on a log as he had just seen by his companion. Willie had just looked at him, and then was in the act of taking a fish from his hook, and as he turned around to follow up the creek, he had fished up as far as the Eggermont place and not having discovered Willie in this distance called to him and turned back, thinking that perhaps he was fishing down stream.

Willie came as far as the place where they had hidden their lunch and discovered that his companion had not been there, so he waited about an hour and a quarter until noon, and as he did not appear he started back in search of him, but could not find any trace of him.

Coming back to the point where they first came to the creek Willie waited until 2 p. m., and then made another search but in vain. He then wrote a note on a large piece of brown paper saying: "I had I have gone down the river toward home. I have got the note for you and the grub, Chandler," and left it in plain view in a place where they had proposed to eat their dinner, and then started for town.

As soon as Willie reached town he told his brother, Edgar Button, that he had lost Henry somehow. Edgar replied that he was confident Henry would find his way home as he was well acquainted with the country, and his brother felt no alarm.

Later in the evening Edgar and Willie procured a livery team and started in search for the missing brother. They arrived at the Neal creek bridge about 9 p. m. Edgar took a search light and waded down the center of the creek, while Willie followed along the bank with a lantern.

They arrived at the place where Willie had left the note for his companion and found it just as he had left it, and discovered no sign of Henry having been there. The boys came home, and in the morning search was renewed.

Early Tuesday morning Frank Chandler, his son Willie, and Edgar Button started back, and as they came to the place where Willie had last seen him on the log, Edgar discovered the body of his brother lying in the creek, dead. Henry was lying in a deep pool with his face turned up stream, his left arm hanging at right down and his right resting on his breast. His feet were entangled in some brush and roots, and in this position a part of his left shoulder and his fish basket (which he had strapped over him) were exposed above the surface of the water.

Willie Chandler was positive then that Henry had fallen into the water from the log while he was concerned with a fish that he had caught just previous to his disappearance. The body was brought to town and it was discovered that the watch that he carried had stopped at 4:20 p. m. This incident remains a mystery. It was also discovered that respiration had ceased as the body fell into the water as there was no water in the lungs when the body was found. The body was taken to the home and embalmed by Undertaker Bartmess waiting the arrival of the parents.

The news of his death was conveyed by telegraph to his father at Marcola, Ore., and to his mother at Berkeley, Cal., where she had just gone to be present at the commencement exercises of the university where her son Ralph, will graduate.

Mrs. Button is expected home today, and upon her arrival arrangements will be made concerning the funeral.

W. F. Laraway Returns.

W. F. Laraway and wife returned Sunday from their visit to southern California.

Mr. Laraway stated to a Glacier representative that they had a very nice visit while away. The tropical life of this section of the state soon loses its charm to one accustomed to the scenic beauty and colorful grandeur of such scenery as surrounds the valley of Hood River.

He said: "I would not trade one acre in Hood River for any two acres that I saw in the southern part of the state. They can have that country. Hood River is good enough for me. I traveled over a vast section of that state, and I think that I am competent to judge as for myself. We have got the best country in the west right here." Mr. Laraway outlined something of the feeling that was manifested in Los Angeles when the news of the wrecked train carrying the Pennsylvania delegation of the Shriners reached that city. He said: "We were all horror stricken at the awful catastrophe that befell these fellow sojourners. The Southern Pacific railroad has been severely criticized, and it has lost a great many friends. Well, I'm glad that I saw home again. The trip has done me and myself a vast amount of good."

That you must not receive or ship any fruit that bears a misleading label in reference to the place of growth or repack.

That a dealer in fruit must not repackage or relabel fruit that is already labeled as to the place where grown or repacked.

That you must mark or label each crate or package of fruit with your name, your post office together with your street address.

That no company or common carrier will be permitted to receive your fruit for shipment if any of these provisions are violated.

Apples Not Fair Samples.

The Newtown apples brought to Hood River by Hon. E. L. Smith from the orchard of Dr. Robinson in Virginia, and displayed in Laraway's window, were not fair samples of the fruit raised by the doctor in his home orchard. Mr. Smith stated to a reporter that the crop of Newtowns grown by Dr. Robinson were shipped to England where they commanded a fancy price, and that the apples grown on this place are of as fine flavor as the fruit grown in our valley. The two apples that were displayed were taken from a lot that were not included in the shipments, and are not a fair average.

Returms From Washington.

J. J. Luckey, who went to Washington, D. C., recently in the interest of his patents, returned last Saturday from his trip across the continent. When seen by a Glacier reporter Mr. Luckey stated his trip had been devoid of accidents and that it had been one of pleasure as well as profit. Jack visited every point of interest at the national capital. He was privileged to go through the capitol building and made a call on the President at the executive mansion.

An Mr. Luckey introduced himself as an Oregonian Teddy's face brightened up and he said: "I feel very near to the people out in Oregon, it is one of the great states in the growing northwest." Mr. Luckey met several of the representative men of the nation during his several days stay at the capitol.

The special mission of Mr. Luckey's visit was to interview the officials in the departments of the patent office and to consult the records in reference to the various patents that might bear a resemblance to the ones that he desired to file for record. After careful examination it was found that his devices would not infringe upon any patents on file in the department.

Mr. Luckey has perfected a "nut lock" which, when adjusted to its position, cannot work loose either by rotary or lateral movement. The nut is screwed on the bolt or other device and then secured held by a thumb which is locked by a slug and spring. There is nothing complicated about the nut, and it is thoroughly substantial. This device will undoubtedly revolutionize this phase of modern machinery.

The second article passed for patent is a "one lock for ball bearing." This piece of mechanism is somewhat complicated in its construction. However, it is made substantial and intended for practical purposes. The signal advantage claimed for the patent office, is that it will never require oiling. It is unnecessary to remove it from a wagon or other vehicle of locomotion to which it may be attached. It will wear out the body of a wagon without greasing it, and it will never require greasing on the axle too years after it has been put on as it was the day when it was first fitted to the shaft.

Dr. Brosius, of our city, has used this device on his buggy several times, and he is very satisfied. It is evident that Jack is master of the situation. He has secured his filings and acceptance papers. A few days after this recognition by the patent office, he received inquiries of several large manufacturing plants relative to the disposition of his articles. R. E. Reed, of our city, is now associated with Mr. Luckey in the development of the patent and manufacture of the devices. The gentlemen left for Portland Tuesday to consult with parties in that city relative to its manufacture on a large scale. It is the hope of the gentlemen may consummate their plans so that it will bring them a fortune for their toils.

Hood River has been in need of a fuel center for some years past, and an enterprise of this character will undoubtedly meet with success.
