Wants a Home in Hood River

Green Burr, Clinton Co., Pa. February 28, 1908. Dear Sir:—I have a number of booklets and reading matter from your state (Oregon) I obtained from a friend who has traveled through the entire state and I read them all, and I am quite interested in the matter.

Among the booklets is one of Hood River where I saw your name as a publisher and venture to write to you and tell you the object of the same. I am a farmer's daughter of Pennsylvania and know how to work in the house and on the farm, or any kind of work that belongs to women. Now, I wish you would publish this letter or a part thereof, as much as you think proper. I would like to correspond with some young gentleman who has a clean record of good character, sober and strong physically and mentally, and who would be inclined to christianity. One with fair prospects. Do not object to divorce. Will exchange photos; would not care to correspond with any of 1903 years. I am 22 years old, am strong and healthy, fair, common education. Would not object to marriage if I found the right one. Address, Green Burr, Clinton Co., Pa.

Will Be Put Up for Slaughter.

The following from a Washington paper has a really barbarous meaning. The die is cast, the Rubious is crossed. Mr. Bryan is as good as nominated. He will write the platform. He will name his running mate, and the result will be the same. Mr. Bryan will be smitten under the fifth rib, just as he smote Judge Parker. And does the world know that hundreds of thousands of voters, enthusiastic Bryanites of 1896 and 1900, intend to have a share in the knifing? The sole reason why Mr. Bryan will be nominated at Danvar is that it is the one way to be rid of him. He could have been beaten for the nomination, and would have been, but for the fact that a crushing defeat in 1908 will make an end of him.

A FAMILY OF MICE.

What Happened to the Stupid One When They Went to Play.

There were five little field mice. Their mother was very wise, and one day when they went out to play she told them that when she chirped like a bird they must lie perfectly still. That seemed so funny that the mice were surprised and began to ask each other a great many questions about it. It would have been much better to ask their mamma, but they were very little. Just then their mother saw a hawk in the sky and chirped. One poor little mouse got frightened and forgot all about what she said, and one dived down into a hole. Unfortunately there was a wasel in that hole, and the wasel got him. Another ran off and got lost in the grass and never was found again. Another ran and tried to hide under a leaf, and a hawk swooped down and ate him up. Another jumped into the bushes and a snake swallowed him. The fifth stayed quite still, and, though he did not know it, he looked so like a withered leaf that neither snake nor the wasel nor the hawk saw him at all. Which one do you think was the wisest?—St. Nicholas.

Monkey in Sight.

One girl leaves the room, while the others hide a trinket or some other small object. When they are ready they call "Whoop!" and she enters. If she moves toward the hiding place they cry: "You burn!" "Now you burn more!" If she goes very near they say, "Oh, now she is most blazing!" If she moves from the object they say, "How cold she grows!" If the article is found the finder cries, "Monkey in sight!" and then she has the pleasure of hiding it as some other child leaves the room.
