Hobo With a Roll.

Marshall Ganger picked up a hobo Saturday with nearly $1,000 on his person and locked him up until he could find out something about him.

Mr. Ganger was searching a number of the weary Willies which he found in the jungles and along the track, as his custom, and near the mill he found a ragged, dirty husky walking along the track. The man refused to stop or answer his questions, so he compelled him to halt. The first drive he made into the pockets of the man revealed a number of bills of large denominations. He then called over a couple of the mill men who were watching the proceedings, and they all concluded the circumstance warranted investigation. The man then put up a struggle against being locked up, and it was necessary to handcuff him. Several times he attempted to escape, and tried hard to pick the lock on the handcuffs. Upon the arrival at the jail it took three men to search him, and there was found upon him $925 in bills and $6 in silver. Two shotgun cartridges fitted together held a number of bills of large denominations, and two other wallets contained bills.

The man gave his name as John Smith and refused to tell anything else as to where he came from or how he got the money. Communication with the cuffs at Portland, The Dalles and other cities failed to disclose any robberies or any one answering the man's description who was wanted for any crime.

The money was deposited in the bank and the man turned in Monday morning. To outsiders he said he was a sheep herder from Boise, and is an apparently eccentric character.
