Fewer people were seen on the streets of Hood River Christmas day than any time in the memory of close observers. With the exception of those who were obliged to go to the postoffice few ventured out. The bad weather no doubt accounted for this to a large extent but still it was not as unpleasant as that of Christmas Day a year ago, when it not only rained in torrents but blew a gale. Hood River was not the only place that experienced bad weather as reports are to the effect that a general storm prevailed along the coast in the Northwest states.

Fire Destroys A. Butts' Home
Fire destroyed the home of A. Butts in the Belmont district last Thursday morning having caught, it is thought, in some way from the chimney. The flames were discovered shortly after the fire had been kindled in the kitchen and started on the top floor of the house in a pile of lumber. The first Mr. Butts knew of it was when he happened to look up and saw the flames through the cracks in the ceiling.

He notified the other members of the family and they immediately set to work to save the furniture and were fortunate enough to get out all that was on the first floor. They were unable to get out that on the second floor which was consumed, causing a loss of $100. The loss on the house was $200 on which there was no insurance.
