as a truit producer.

Last year William P. Stark of Louisana, Mo., president of the Missouri state baord of horticulture; J. M. Irvine, editor of the Fruit Grower; I. H Todd and J. H. Christian, also members of the board, spent nearly two months traveling through that fruit country west of the Rocky mountains which comprises the states of Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washing ton, Oregon and a part of Moutana. What they learned Mr. Stark told about this morning.
"Back here in Missouri," he said.

"we feel pretty good if we can sell orchard land for more than $100 an acre But out in that Western country $4,000 an acre is considered a fair price Possibilties. I never saw anyhing like it. Why, even a real estate man couldn't exagerate the possibiltites of that country out there. Apples, peaches, pears, plums, cherries, berries, fruit of any kind, grows in size and quantity and quality that are remarkable. Everything's just right. The climatic conditions are just exactly what are needed, the majority of the growers are college graduates and everything is done in a scientific
