NO CAR FROM HERE AT SPOKANE SHOW

A slight ambiguity in the announcement of the Spokane Fruit Show made it impossible for the Hood River valley to be represented in the carload competition at that exhibition this week. Owing to the rather light crop in the valley this year and the fact that most of the orchards contain mixed varieties of trees made it hard to get a carload of fancy apples of any one variety from a single orchard in the valley. However, C. H. Sprout planned to enter a carload of Spitzenbergs for the Elliott prize and sweepstakes.

The rules read that the show the wrappers were to be removed from the top layer. Mr. Sprout wrapped all of his apples on the theory that the carload would all be wrapped. He later ascertained that many of the carload exhibitors were to be shown with the top layer unwrapped and he realized that they would have advantage from this fact.

It would have loosened the pack so much to remove the wrappers of the top layer after reaching Spokane, that the scoring pack would have fallen low. As Mr. Sprout had already wrapped each layer of his exhibit it would have made it necessary to make an entire repack to put his car in shape for the show. As this would have been expensive and as there was scarcely time to accomplish it in time to exhibit at the show, Mr. Sprout gave up the idea of showing his apples.

A wrong impression of discrimination against Hood River was conveyed in a dispatch to the Portland Journal last week. Mr. Sprout had asked if it would have been possible to change the ruling and to have all the exhibits wrapped. But if the apple show management had made it possible to enter the Hood River apples as they had been packed, it would have shut a number of other carload exhibitors out of the show who had put a different construction on the rules.

The Land of Red Apples.

The following from the Drain Non-partial represents the impression of Hood River gained by one of the visitors of the State W. C. T. U. convention held here last month.

One does not live long in Oregon without hearing of "that wonderful Hood River country"—the land of red apples. So much do we hear about its wealth and beauty, that we soon have a picture in our minds of a place last equal to the Fairy Land of our childhood dreams. When a few weeks ago we were promised a visit to Hood River we naturally look forth to it with pleasant anticipations. Visions of red apples danced before our eyes—big red apples—not only for the good little boy that says all the truth, but enough for all the boys. The last part of the journey going over was made in the night so we did not see any of the country surrounding the town.

The next morning at the first good daylight, we were out to take a load and we saw what a very common looking town! We rubbed our eyes and looked again. Yes, there could be no mistake about it. These trees were oak—just the common kind that we use for stove wood at Drain. And not a red apple in sight. And to complete the disappointment an "Oregon hit" was flooding the land scape. With a sigh we turned from the window. "Yes, another big story. After breakfast we'll run over and climb old Mount Hood just to have it said we did climb it, and then we'll go back to Drain where there really is something worth looking at."

We were very busy the next two days, and forgot our disappointment in work. The third day the sun shone. Things took on a brighter look, and when we were invited to take a ride through the orchards, we were glad to go.

The business part of the town is built on the side of a bluff over looking the Columbia river. Standing on one street we look down on the roofs of the next one below. This is all we had seen so far. After going up for what seemed a great way, we came out upon a level country, and we immediately "took it all back and declared we never said it." For we saw for the first time the real home part of Hood River. And it is truly a wonderful place. Just at our feet in a orchard—and such an orchard! Not a weed, not a down apple nor a diseased tree. Everything wears such a prosperous look. Good buildings—many of them fine. There are four public schools employing three and four teachers each. One High school, eight churches, and no saloons. We had only one hour's time, so only got a glimpse. We saw no farms, only 3, 10, and 15 acre lots. The whole community is of one mind, all working together. Every man, woman and child a booster. Their great pride is their apples, and they have made them so perfect, that now they can get their own price and get it. Many big stories do they tell, and quote figures until you are dizzy.

As we were passing a certain place, this story was told, and it was a peach that told it, so it's so even if it isn't so: A German bought five acres on time. He has paid for it, cared for his family of nine, owns a big store, is at present building a fine dwelling, has a son in Wisconsin University, one in Cornell and the rest in Hood River schools. He has made every dollar from the five acre of apples, but there is some one at work in that orchard every day in the year.

Some of the land is under irrigation and some is not. Not only the valley land but the mountains are used. There is one place where we could see a community so high up that they depend on cisterns for their water supply and yet there were the orchards. Yes, it is a great place, and they have years the start of the people of this community, but speaking seriously we do not believe they had any better to start with than we have right here.

The prunes we took for Demonstration Night, were the wonder of some from other parts of the state, and we were asked several times "Do they raise these in Douglas?" Of course we know that those people have given a great deal of thought, time and money to their speciality, and employ the best methods—but it pays.
