CONVICT LABOR ON WASHINGTON ROADS

Preparations are being made at the state penitentiary for the sending out of hundreds of convicts to the state road camps. Very shortly more than 600 men will be outside the walls. Four hundred of the 600 men who have been used in the jute mill will be given to the good roads movement. These, together with those from other departments and those already on the roads, will make the total close to 650. Every convict who is to be out is being measured by the Bertillon system and finger prints for identification are being taken. The prisoners are being notified when they will depart and among those who are to go a feeling of general gladness prevails. Convict work is no longer regarded as an experiment in this state. The work at Lyle was taken as an experiment and it has proven more successful than was even hoped. The men do a greater amount of work than do the paid laborers working on similar projects, it is claimed, and are becoming skilled so that their work counts more than does that of the ordinary pick-up laborer. No extra guards are needed, and those who are employed in this phase act more as foremen than guards, their presence being required as "bosses." Additional men will be sent to Lyle which is on the road known as No. 8, and Camp No. 6, at Blanchard is also to be largely increased.—Bigen Observer.

A few weeks ago fruit growers on both sides of the White Salmon united in an effort to dislodge the saloon at Underwood. The method of procedure was to get a list of names of a majority of the people on the Skamania side of the river to which they added the petition of the signers on the east side of the river. This they presented to the commissioners of Skamania county, who informed them that unless the saloon keeper could get a majority of names the license would not be renewed. This he cannot do and the ranchers come off victorious.

land, arrived in White Salmon Monday morning, and picking up a few more men in the town, started two crews at work, one checking up the White Salmon end of the line; the other going to Camas Prairie end of the line.
