Inner Gunderud, a deserter from the army, gave himself up to Marshal Lewis Saturday and was locked up until the authorities at Fort Stevens could be notified, when he was taken back to the fort. Gunderud said that he had evaded capture for three years, but was tired trying to keep secreted. He had spent most of the time in Washington, but felt that he was being looked for all the time, and the suspense being liable to arrest at any time was too much worry, so decided to go back and take his punishment. Marshal Lewis was notified that Gunderud had been missing for more than five years and could not be punished.
