LET THE COURT NAME THE PRICE. the question of paying in the neighbor- the man without means to purchase question. The opinion of the tax- chard is insured. payers of the city as to the value of no matter what price is finally agreed at once by condemnation proceedings and let the court determine what price the city shall pay the owners as damages. If the private company have any property of value to the city in the water plant let the court determine what that value is, and let the city ever the price may be. The fact that the water has been termed unfit for use by the state board of health must be reckoned with, and due consideration given to this feature of the question. We believe there would be a willingness on the part of the public in general to accept the finding of the court as to what damages the company is entitled to, whether the amount be great or small, and the water question could be settled on a fair basis to all parties. The private owners seem unwilling to recede from their position of a big price for the plant, and the public are unwilling to pay the price asked. Let the court name the price.

THE SELLING QUESTION.

The movement on foot this week in Portland, where representatives of the northwestern fruit sections are called together to devise some plan for the better marketing of their fruit, has been brought about by the conditions which resulted this year from the indiscriminate dumping of the whole apple crop of the Pacific Northwest pretty blonde hair got it where he is onto the eastern markets at one time. Whether the meeting will result in the adoption of a plan which will solve the question entirely is doubtful, but it will have good results at least,

We are this year brought face to face with the selling problem. Hood claims to have gone to The Dalles and River has solved the question of the back in 15 minutes. Surely he arrived River has solved the question of the the highest returns. Whether it would profit Hood River to enter into an association which had apples to sell of all grades and prices, is a question. Different varieties of apples must go to different markets, and at different prices. Yet an association which would keep in touch with market conditions and so distribute the crop from the various sections as to prevent a glut of the market at any one place, would be of general benefit. Whether that can be done, is a question, but it is perhaps worth trying.

In any event, Hood River must here after pay as much attention to the marketing of its apples as to the growing and packing, and it will pay to get the best selling force that can be secured and pay salaries accordingly. If a sales manager in the field is able to save the growers even five cents a box, it would amount to $25,000 on this year's crop alone, and what will it be in the future? It is the most important question with which we have to deal at present, and it is so regarded by the directors of the Apple Growers Union as well as others who have given the matter any thought. Whether we join in any plan which may be adotped by the meeting being link of weinerwurst. The aforesaid short history of its remarkable record, held in Portland or not, we should back up the Union in putting a competent selling force in the field to place our apples at the right time and at the

According to a resident of the Frankton district, Sam Bartmess stirred up that peaceful valley the first of the week. Sam was seen driving along the road in a solemn manner, and the neighbors began calling one another over the phone and inquiring who was dead. No one seemed to know and finally Sam was seen to go to the saw mill and get a load of sawdust. The Franktonites are now wondering if he uses it for embalming.
