The Marches of '61 to '65.
(Read by Miss Blanch Ford at the joint meeting of the Canby Post G. A. R. and the Canby Woman's Relief Corps held on Saturday afternoon, February 11, in celebration of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The poem was written for the occasion by T. J. Cunningham.)

Last May I saw the G. A. R. with halting step go by.
'Tis fifty years since first they marched With bayonet fixed and flashing eye.
With courage strong and purpose bold— 'To save the Union, held so dear:— And guard the flag that over head Held reverent in their hearts, its cheer.
These marches, silent, aged and worn Think of the past in which they strove— Their banner blazed with battle field O'er all the south, where they did rove.
Fort Sumpter's fall called out these men To battle with a traitor crew. They answered promptly to the call And followed where the bugle blew.
Alexandria taken without a fight, where gallant Elsworth fell, These marches, quick avenged his death and stopped one rebel yell. Undaunted by Bull Run's defeat, they onward kept their way, At Laurel Hill and Phillippi, swept out the rebel gray.
Belmont, Kentucky and Mill Springs, where Zollicoffer fell, These names upon their banners, what cheering tale they tell.
Pee Ridge and Lexington, Fort Henry and Donaldson taken Left an open road to Shiloh, where Grant was, badly shaken.
But he held his own, while Buel's men came marching all the night And hurled the rebel back again, who thought they'd won the fight.
Springfield, Fair Oaks, and at Antietam too These marches saw hot times through all the year of eighteen sixty-two.
But Oh! the thought appalls me, to tell all the fields they won Why to tell the tale of Gettysburg would many volumes fill And leave out all the cream these marches could instill.
It took some five and twenty years, Shiloh's story to make true But they saved the land most bravely, Those marching boys in blue.
They march no more to battle, no deadly arms they bear, But carry sweet flowers of spring to deck the graves of comrades dear.
While at the front "Old Glory" waves A blessing on this tottering host. And a nation bows its reverent head, From Maine to Pacific coast.
What did they do to merit this? They did not free the slave, Oh! no. Commander-in-chief Old Abe (So called by friend and foe) Freed the bondsman and cleaned the flag, By a single stroke of pen. But he knew he had to back him this host of marching men.
Those men who fought in fierceest war, that ever a nation rent;— Those men of a thousand battles, who'd scaled every battlement, Those men of Chicamauga, Mission Ridge, Kenesaw
Joined hands with me who stood at Pickett's charge And in the Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Petersburg
Had shown themselves Soldiers—large. Remembering the orders of Commander-in-Chief— To bind up the wounds caused by war— Came home, and decided the very best way To do this was to form into Posts the G. A. R.
The old foes were remembered in this wise arrangement And banished from hearts all thoughts of estrangement
In fraternity and charity they met them sincere
They returned it with loyalty proven and clear.
So that today I'll wager more than a frank You can't tell who's most loyal, Johnny or Yank.
