NO WATER IN MAINS HEIGHTS AROUSED
Except for a few far seeing citizens, who perhaps knew what was coming from past experience, and laid in a reserve supply in their vessels, water for the breakfast table was missing from homes on the Heights Tuesday morning. Some secured water for making coffee at different wells in the locality. It is stated that the water company received some not complimentary terms from these early foragers. Indeed, the whole of the Heights population were far from pleased with the situation Tuesday morning. The inconvenience was felt by housewife and husband. The water famine lasted until later in the forenoon from about 3:30 the day before. However, the citizens of the portion of the city are not only disgruntled because of the inconveniences caused by a dry main but assert that they have a right to better fire protection. A strong wind was blowing Monday night and a blaze starting on the hill would undoubtedly have resulted disastrously.

Albert S. Hall, manager of the water company, states that the shortage in the mains was due to the fact that a large amount of water was taken from the company's source of supply by irrigators. Mr. Hall also states that a number of patrons have been making an improvident use of water. Tuesday night inspectors found a number of hoses running at midnight which they cut off.

Hen Mothers Pigs.
A hen mothering a litter of six wee pigs is the unusual spectacle to be witnessed on the irrigation farm of William H. Evans just south of Pilot Rock, Or. The hen had made her nest in the pigpen, filled it with eggs and started to setting before it was discovered by an old sow who converted the eggs into pork.

Though her nest had been destroyed, the hen's mother instinct remained, so she adopted the sow's litter of pigs. During the day she follows them about, as they pay little attention to her and follow the mother pig until evening.

Then it is that the hen calls the downy porkers to her and hovers them with her wings just as she would little chickens.

The pigs seem to appreciate the downy couch thus afforded them, remaining under the wings throughout the night.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.
