BLODGETTVILLE

Bruce Shumann returned last Friday from Seattle where he has been on a business trip. On arriving in town he at once took over the work of reorganizing municipal lodging houses.

Work on the new scenic-railway is finished, and the route is now open to the public. The city has spared no expense to make this road one of the safest, and most beautiful in the Northwest. The Pennsylvania Block Signal System has been installed, and patrons may enjoy the comforts of the trip in absolute security. The contract work was undertaken by the well known Land Transformer, Luigi Trombone, formerly of Naples, Italy. Signor Trombone is perhaps better known as the author of that justly famous bon-mot, "I am de hanan" me for de tall timber."

E. A. Brown, formerly of New York and Wyoming, and now one of the leading citizens of a fashionable suburb of Blodgettville, last week reported the loss of several valuable chickens. When seen in connection with the outrage, Chief of Police Homer Rogers said earnestly, "Such things cannot be; it is a crying shame; the unvarnished name of our fair city is held up to ridicule and scorn, and in some measure perhaps the efficiency of my administration is brought into question. I shall very soon make arrangements to give the matter some thought in the future." The theft occurred on Friday last, but as we go to press no clue to the crime has been obtained.

On Saturday last the members of the Blodgettville Common Council entertained at a delightful chicken dinner. A thoroughly enjoyable fun chin was held. Fred McCrea left for Hood River immediately after.
