Anyone walking or driving along the country roads now can see old Nature at her loveliest, putting on the finishing touches, as it were, for a dress parade. There are the orchards, with the rosy apples showing through the foliage and the peaches, pears and grapes, and the fields of grain and corn. While on the wooded hillsides and along the streams show the lovely crimson, yellow and green of the maple, cottonwood, Alder, fir, pine and oak, each having a beauty all their own yet, adding to the whole, until there is completed one grand picture, with Mt. Adams on the North and Mt. Hood at the south, as sentinels, their snow capped amidst the clouds. Truly, fall of the year, the harvest time, opens to one, and we can say with Riley, that the best time is when "The frost is on the pumpkin, and the fozder's in the shock."

FRANKTON.

Mrs. R. W. LaMar was called to Oregon City Wednesday, by the illness of her aunt.
