MANY SALMON AT UNDERWOOD HATCHERY

Seven million fingerlings, or minnow salmon, will be dumped into the White Salmon river within the next 60 days. For the past two weeks half a dozen men, under D. Winn, have been collecting eggs, fertilizing them and placing them in the state hatchery one mile beyond Underwood.

It is an interesting process, the collection of these pink eggs about as large as a pea. For some time great schools of salmon, mostly chinook, have been beating their way up the Columbia, even as far as Idaho, nosing out gravelly places for the throwing of their eggs. Accompanying the females are the males, which, when the spawn is thrown fertilizes them with a milky deposit, after which both drift away and die. A salmon always dies after spawning, seemingly sacrificing themselves for the "preservation of the race."

The White Salmon is a favorite spawning ground, where the state has devised ways and means for their capture. At the mouth of the stream a trap is built so the fish can get through but cannot get back. Some distance up the stream a dam is made, cutting off farther progress. After dark the men make a sweep with the net and dozens of big salmon, sometimes weighing 30 pounds each, are hauled in and dumped into the killing pens. On the following morning the egg collectors pick out the female ripe for the killing—for the eggs must all be separated from the head with a club, chop off the tails for bleeding, open them and deposit the eggs in a large pan. A male is then grabbed by the tail, pulled from the pen and his milk scattered over the eggs, which quickly absorb the fluid and are thereby fertilized.

The dead salmon are given away, both to Whites and Indians, 30 of the latter being named on the river to provide themselves with winter meat and trade the surplus for other desirable. The squaws grunt out their displeasure at the ranchers taking the fish, and will slap a youngster out of their way if it makes no difference to them if the salmon is yellow with fungus, or parasites, already so decayed that death would quickly follow after spawning, cut them up, even the heads, string them on poles for sun drying, the process being completed by smoking in huts. A small fire is kept going all the time in these salmoo-hung, fish smelling huts, families sleeping and eating amongst it.

The cans of salmon eggs are carried to the hatchery, where they are placed in baskets containing about 25,000 eggs each. These wire baskets are arranged in a regular array, so that running water from a large spring is constantly passing through them. A man is kept busy picking out bad eggs, the percentage of which is infinitesimally small. After a few days the eggs become so tender for one week that the least jolt is liable to spoil the whole basketful, but after that they may be handled without danger, shipped long distances, many of them having been sent to foreign countries even and arriving in good condition.

In about 70 days the great mass of pretty pink eggs become little wriggling "strains." Growing into fish shape they are nursed at the hatchery on beef fat and mush until about an inch to an inch and a half long, when they are siphoned into pails and dumped into the White Salmon, scooping for the protecting rocks so quickly that not one is left in sight, for they have their enemies, particularly the naughty trout. When large enough to feed their fins they strike out into the big river, down past Astoria and out to sea, again coming back in four to six weeks to spawn and die—that is, if they have been successful in running the gauntlet of the net and fish men and the fish wheels, for the salmon industry of the Columbia runs into the millions of dollars.

It is believed by the hatchery people that salmon come back to the place where they were hatched to spawn, which is one reason being that they have the rocks for protection. Since the collection of eggs has been in practice there has been a very noticeable increase in the output of salmon, for the percentage of successfully hatched salmon to the amount of eggs thrown in the natural way is very small.—White Salmon Enterprise.

POVERTY NO BAR TO EARNST YOUTHS

Burns Powell, of Monmouth, Earl Jones, of Dallas, and Leon Ray, of Eugene, three of the most prominent Seniors at the University of Oregon, are demonstrating that any High School student, who has the necessary ambition and energy can not only get a higher education without financial aid but also may win the highest political literary and forensic honors of the college.

Powell, editor of the Oregon Emerald and President and Leader of the Glee Club, by playing in the town orchestra and doing other work in the summer has thus far kept the wolf from the door although he is entirely dependent upon his own resources for his support.

Jones, President of the Student Y. M. C. A., and editor of the Engineering magazine, not being gifted with musical ability, has earned his way by the more humble vocations of clerking, store sweeping, and milking a family cow. Despite his somewhat burdensome outside work, Jones finds time to take part in student activities. In the summer time Jones digs sewers or does anything else that will turn him an honest penny for use in the winter.

Ray, President of the Student Body, and a member of one of Oregon's championship debating teams, has followed the advice, "A penny saved is a penny earned," and by hatching in a little cabin out in the suburbs of Eugene, has cut down living expenses to a minimum. His board bill averages about $6.50 a month.

Country's Sale of Mineral Water.

In 1910 the sales of mineral water in the United States amounted to $6,357,590, the product being 62,950,125 gallons, as reported by George C. Matson, of the United States Geological Survey, Minnesota has the greatest producer, with 9,962,370 gallons, derived from 19 springs. New York was a close second, selling 8,780,903 gallons from 46 springs. Wisconsin, however, obtained the greatest income from her mineral waters, her sales amounting to $974,266; New York was second, with $858,635; and Indiana third, with $514,968. Minnesota's sales amounted to $251,609; Louisiana has only four commercial springs; they produced 2,313,000 gallons.

Maine's output of mineral waters, from 29 springs, decreased 277,370 gallons but on account of high prices increased in value over 1909. The figures for 1910 being 1,238,171 gallons and $404,589. Of Wisconsin's mineral waters, 2,151,782 gallons were used in the manufacture of "soft drinks." Pennsylvania has 14 springs and produced 2,536,337 gallons, valued at $221,885.

The mineral water trade, says Mr. Matson, continues to be prosperous, although there was a decrease in output of about 4 per cent as compared with 1909. The future outlook is good. The importation of mineral waters in 1910 was 3,306,303 gallons, valued at $883,136.

Something You Should Know About Substitution

If you wanted to buy oak lumber and the man delivered yellow pine, you would know the difference.

If you wanted to buy silk and they sent you calico, you would have no trouble in seeing the substitution.

It is not so easy, however, with medicine. A great many medicines look alike and taste alike, BUT THEY DON'T ACT ALIKE. Just think this over the next time you want medicines. Remember that at our store you can absolutely rely on every drug we sell. The difference between buying medicines and merchandise is the difference between knowledge and belief. You know the one but you have to believe in the other. You will be absolutely safe when you put your belief in us.
