SEEKING STOLEN PAINTING.

French Detective Got Wrong Clue to "Mona Lisa."

FOR hours the French sleuth had followed the man through devious highways and byways, the unsuspecting fellow slouching along with his canvas roll held tightly under his arm.

"Aha," hissed the smiling detective, "I have been at it last!" He came a little closer. Spots of paint were distinctly visible on the canvas roll.

The sleuth sprang forward and snatched away the package.

"I arrest you," he dramatically cried, "for the theft of the great 'Mona Lisa!'"

The suspect stared at the sleuth, and the sleuth stared at the unrolled canvas.

"Monsieur," said the suspect calmly, "I will thank you to return to me my overalls!"

And taking the canvas garment from the detective's nerveless fingers he continued along the road to Passy.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Dangerous Story.

A Yale undergraduate has been having a fairly lively time of it during his summer vacation and when the allowance has not been keeping schedule time.

He was invited out to dinner with his mother, and he was seen to get a bit nervous when she began one of her favorite stories. This concerned the burning of their home, on which occasion the son's watch, left on a bureau, was found ticking in the ruins after the house had been destroyed.

At the conclusion of the story the college boy jumped up abruptly and left the room with his handkerchief over his face as if suddenly seized with nosebleed. He did not return for several minutes, by which time the conversation drifted.

After dinner the "undergrad" chum asked the significance of the move. "I'll tell you, but nobody else," said he. "When mother told that story I was afraid she was going to ask me to show the watch."—Chicago Post.

The Appearance of Evil. "Sister Henderson," said Deacon Hypers, "you should avoid even the appearance of evil."

"Why, deacon, what do you mean?" asked Sister Henderson.

"I observe that on your sideboard you have several cut glass decanters and that each of them is half filled with what appear to be ardent spirits."

"Well, now, deacon, it isn't anything of the kind. The bottles look so pretty on the sideboard that I just filled them halfway with some floor stain and furniture polish, just for appearances."

"That's why I'm cautioning you, sister," replied the deacon. "Feeling a trifle weak and faint, I helped myself to a dose from the big bottle in the middle."—London Telegraph.

Danger in Delay.

Men who admire many girls and hesitate too long in making a selection are liable to see the whole flock fly south.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

A Valuable Man.

"Yes, he had some rare trouble with his eyes," said the celebrated oculist. "Every time he went to read he would read double."

"Four fellows," remarked the sympathetic person, "I suppose that interfered with his holding a good position?"

"Not at all. The gas company gobbled him up and gave him a lucrative job reading gas meters."—Lippincott's.

He Knew His English.

"Then I'm to tell the firm," the bill collector said, making a momentary detour in his notebook, "that you'll probably settle this account next week?"

"Well, I'd hardly put it that way," hesitatingly answered the other. "Probably is a pretty strong word; better make it 'possibly.'"—Chicago Tribune.

Sometimes Happens.

Friend—You took your son into your establishment a few months ago to teach him the business. I understand. How did he turn out?

Business Man (wearily)—Great success. He's teaching me the business now.—Toledo Blade.

Not of the Smart Set.

Indignant Mother—Don't you ever dare to play with the cat next door again. You know very well that she has no license.

Our Restaurants.

"Why, the meat and potatoes are quite cold."

"Yes, sir; you would have done better to have ordered a sandwich at this time of day, but you particularly asked for something hot!"—London Opinion.

You are probably aware that pneumonia always results from a cold, but you never heard of a cold resulting in pneumonia when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy was used. Why take the risk when this remedy may be had for a trifle? For sale by all dealers.
