BUILDING AND MAINTAING ROADS The building of roads is one thing and their maintenance another, as was Speech was interesting from the fact grow faster. that if presented in a straightforward manner the scientific methods of road construction. The correction of the prevailing idea that all roads, to be any good at all, must be macadam leading into the Upper Valley. Pershould be deseminated. Those roads of the different communities, where the truffic, perhaps, is not so a state road and built by money raised heavy, should not be overlooked. They should be properly graded. If they have not originally been located along grades of convenient per centage, they should be changed. And once graded, they should be watched and carefully maintained. If improper drainage is allowed to exist, it will be but a short time until the entire rondbed will have to be reconstructed.

Prof. Ayren brought out well the point to the effect that a permanent road was never built. When a community constructs a macadam road, in order to secure the best results from its expenditure, a competent and care ful supervisor must make frequent inspections and repairs to the road. The tiniest hole may be started. In five minutes it may be repaired. However, if allowed to go for a week, it may be beyond effective repair.

Rural communities too often do not take sufficient interest in the building of their nighways. They fall to realize that there is no more beneficial institu tion than the well laid out and convenient highway, and the building of the road is left to the supervision of men, secure the best roadways.

PARENTS AND TEACHERS.

The organization of parents and teachers of the county's public schools, the Home and Teachers' Association, seems to be reaping benefits, as it should. It is too often the case that parents and teachers pever see each other or merely form a conventional acquaintanceship. The meetings of the recently organized society make it possible for them to be drawn together, and they are enabled to express to each other their views and ideas as to the needs of the youngsters. These neetings should not be too formal, if the best results be derived from them.

And as to the relationship of teacher and pupil, the teacher that has the greatest respect and admiration among the students is the one that exerts over them a personal influence and creates a feeling of confidence. The boy or who, not taking proper interest and the instructor he or she has a sympagirl, as the case may be, feels that in without proper qualifications, do not thetic friend, and the lessons are pire.
