W. F. LARAWAY

Cote, Perry Harder, and C. H. Thode, of Trout Lake No. 219.

Out at the Narrows where Chas. Erik, the eccentric German, who led a hermit's life setting out a few apple trees and inclined to fight away all sightseers, there is something doing in the way of work. Excavations, tunnels, holes, piles of rock, engines and cook houses indicate unusual operations.

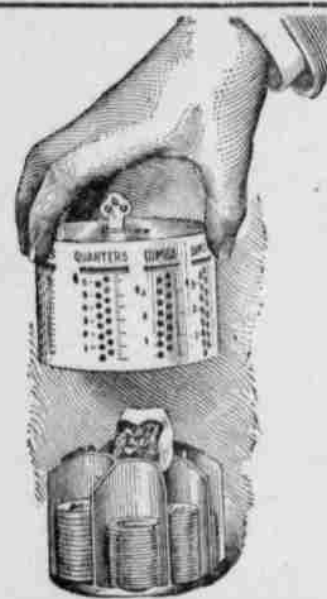

Stone & Webster, electrical contractors of Boston, are following out the plans of Engineer Walsh for the construction of an immense dam for the North-western Electric Co. Nearly $5,000 has already been spent in experimental work. We say "experimental" for it is not certain that the dam will be erected at the present site, which is ideal as a site, but may not be at a part of the river where a suitable foundation for the concrete abutment may be found.

Parts of the hill have been gouged out by hydraulics, a 12-inch pipeline having been laid for over half a mile, connecting with a creek high up the mountain side back of the Kuhne farm. When the nozzle spurts with this great pressure behind it the earth flies and is washed hastily away. The construction of this pipeline was no small job in itself.
