My Lady of The Flowers

By F. A. MITCHEL

During the slege of Paris in 1870 t threw down my palette and brushes and, taking a musket, went into the fortifications. There I was wounded and sent to a hospital.

Most of the women had left the cap-30 92 Ital before the Germans arrived. Some remained because they couldn't get away and a few to assist in taking 650 care of the wounded soldlers. One 8 24 morning I was lying on my cot in ward where the beds lined the walls 6 32 leaving an aisle in the center. The door was opened by a nurse, and a lady 41 12 entered carrying a basket of flowers 36 32 Stopping at the first cot, she took from 474 the basket some of the flowers and handed them to the occupant with a 41 60 few kind words. Then she passed to 49 92 the next and the next, doing the same 49 92 It was probably not five minutes 6 30 from the time she entered the room before I was madly in love with her She was beautiful, but it was not her 44 59 beauty alone that enthralled me. There was about her a certain serene 2 52 purity, a refinement and, above all, a 66 24 gentle dignity that I had never neer combined in any woman. I must have 143 sa forgotten to keep my admiration to my 4 16 self, for she lowered ber eyes under 88 90 my gaze and instead of speaking to me as she did the others simply handed me the flowers and passed on.

From that moment my thoughts were all of her. At the same hour the 7 27 next day I looked for her to come 2 95 again, but she did not. Whether she went the round of the hospitals, visiting each once, or visited only ours I 137 64 disappointed that she did not come did not know. I only knew that I was

But I did not dream of seeing her, Doubtless she was shut up in her home cowering in garret or cellar fearing to be murdered. I roamed the streets looking at the burning of some public building, all the while dreaming of the lady of the flowers.

I was standing one day on the curb just outside the garden of the Tulle cles when, hearing shouts in the direction of the Place de la Concorde, a looked and saw a crowd of communists coming. When they came near me I perceived that their leader was a woman, and when she passed me was filled with horror.

She was my lady of the flowers! What a change from that pitying figure scattering flowers and kind words among wounded soldiers to the lender of a mob! Her dress was now short, and on her head she wore a red cap. Her face was lighted with a zeal such as Joan of Arc's might have worn. For a moment I was too paralyzed to move, and then as the throng of wretched creatures passed on turned and hurrled after them.

Guided by their leader, some of their number pushing a cart smelling of petroleum, they marched rapidly toward the palace of the Tulleries and, leaving the street, joined a vast crowd of shouting madmen in the court, Carrying their petroleum to where others had placed kindling in the building. they poured it on the wood and ignit-

I could not keep her whom I had called the flower lady but now the petroleum lady, in view for the jostling crowd. But presently when a 25 08 red flame burst forth I saw her stand-25 00 ing on a barrel, her face lighted as I can imagine Joan's may have been in 18 81 the moment of victory. The crowd surged forward and she was lost to

Then came the turn when the comw 90 rods, s 20 rods to begin, see 19, 2n, been defended. I had been hunting my lady of the flowers. Vainly I had sought her face among those bands that had held Paris for three days by the throat. I had not found ber, and I thought I should go mad if I did not 11 50 find her. I wished to draw her nway, to beg her to abandon her road to rulu and let me love her forever. I came and stumbled down on the other side. There, lying on the pavement, lighted 2 4 18 by a lamp in a window, was the white face of my lady of the flowers. white face of my lady of the dowers.

With a cry I stooped and caught her in my arms. I hugged her to me to 26 13 bring back the ebbing life. I covered her face with kisses. Her eyes opened. She looked into mine and recognized me. She was too 1 34 far gone to speak, but through those glorious windows her soul came forth 40 76 to meet mine in a loving farewell. Our 9 41 first meeting had been a flash of love. The interval had been a period of hate. Our parting was again a union of our 26 souls. Her breaths grew shorter till at last they censed. She was dead.
