M'CAN TRADES FOR LOWER RIVER RANCH

Capt. C. P. McCan, owner of the Tip Top ranch, has exchanged that place, on which he recently completed one of the handsomest residences in the valley, and two other orchard tracts owned by him on the West Side near his home place, to Dr. Ell's McLain, one of the leading liverymen of Portland, for a tract of 1400 acres four miles west of Rainier, on the lower Columbia. Capt. McCan has procured the large ranch through exchange for the purpose of establishing a horse farm. The district around Rainier is said to be exceptionally well suited for this industry. He will move there in the near future and build a fine home and begin at once the improvement of the place. Although his plans as yet are somewhat tentative, he hopes in time to establish one of the leading stock farms in the state. Large and commodious barns and a training course will be constructed.
 Dr. McLain, who still owns land in the Rainier district, plans on making his home here on his purchase.

UNIQUE MACHINE CLEARS OFF LAND

With two donkey engines, one on each side of the field, and a unique plow, manufactured by a German engineer, who recently came to this country after finishing a scientific education in German schools and after putting in a period in the machine shops there, a Portland contractor is clearing 160 acres of land for L. J. Patterson at the top of the Mosier ridge. The plow is so constructed that it not only digs a trench of nearly two feet but clears the ground at the same time. It is said that an average of an acre a day is thus prepared for orchard.

MAZAMA CLUB WILL SCALE MOUNT ADAMS

The Mazamas, the Oregon mountain climbing association, will spend their outing at the base of Mount Adams next summer. They have planned to camp near Trout Lake. Clyde B. Aitelson, chairman of the state railway commission, who has explored thoroughly the region over which the mountain goats will ramble, is chairman of the outing committee.
 The outing will last a fortnight, August 2-17 inclusive. Local people not members of the organization are invited to join the party.
