Address of Booker T. Washington
(At Asbury M. E. Church, March 25, 1913)

"I am very grateful to the kind friends who have given me the opportunity to address this audience. I have always had a desire to see the Hood River people and their valley, owing to the fact that they have advertised it rather modestly at times."

"One day, some time ago, a friend and I were traveling through Alabama and stopped at a house on the way for a meal. On going to the table our hostess asked us if we would have long or short sweetening in our coffee. As neither of us knew what this meant, both waited for the other to speak. Finally I nudged my companion as a sign that he should speak first, whereupon he said that he would take long sweetening. Then our hostess dipped her finger into a cup of molasses and then placed the same finger in my friend's coffee. When by my turn came I had decided to take short sweetening. So the woman placed a piece of molasses between her teeth, bit it in two, and placed one half in my coffee and the other in her own. So, friends it is the same with my speech. Neither is long nor the short ones are very agreeable, but I have only time today for a short one."

"I live in the black belt of Alabama, there are more negroes in Alabama than white people here in Oregon. Friends, did you ever realize that the total number of negroes in the United States is 10,000,000? Why, there are more negroes in the United States than the total population of Canada, and at one time there were as few as 20 in the United States. We black people have one advantage over you and that is that you came to America and settled your own record, while we were invited to come here and even sent for. And now that you have us here, 10,000,000 of us, the question is how to make us an asset rather than a liability."

"I was born in slavery, in a little cabin 12x18 feet, without windows and with a door that sometimes hung on one hinge, but most of the time didn't hang at all. When Lincoln made us free we had to go back to the coal mines of West Virginia and there I worked to help support us. One day I overheard some men talking of a school in a place called Hampton, where negroes might be educated and where a poor boy could work his way through school; and that day, down in the blackness of the coal mine I made a vow to attend that school, sometime, somehow. A few months later I started and walked 40 miles to Richmond with all my personal belongings done up in a little white bundle. Here I worked and saved, sleeping under a sidewalk, until I had saved a little money. Then I went to Hampton and worked my way through school."

"In 1881 I started my school at Tuskegee, Alabama, in one of the little old cabins common in that region. We started with one instructor and 30 pupils, but we had grown until at the present we employ 186 instructors and our pupils number 1600; and we have representatives from 36 states of the Union and 15 foreign countries. Our trustees are worth $1,250,000, we have over 1000 acres of land and we have 30 buildings connected with our school. Our object is to teach our boys simple, sensible farming and to teach our girls cooking, sewing and housekeeping, not domestic science, an art or domestic economy, and I can warrant that the meals they prepare taste like cooking and not like domestic science."

"When the older blacks first heard of my plan they objected because I meant to teach the children how to work. Being used to hard work in slavery they were prejudiced against bodily labor. To change their ideas I endeavored to point out to them the vast difference between 'working' and 'being worked.' Working means freedom and being worked means slavery. I have tried to show them that domestic science, an art or domestic economy, and I can warrant that the meals they prepare taste like cooking and not like domestic science."

"In Tuskegee we teach 40 different industrial arts for our students. Our buildings, some of which are worth $200,000, has been made at the school. We not only study from books, but we also study material things. Where is the good of studying about a horse from a book when we can study the horse himself? In our mathematics classes we take actual problems from the garden, orchard, or brickyard, and thus we join our class rooms with our industrial activities."

"There is one more thing about which I wish to speak and that is the change in our commencement exercises. Formerly we would have some bright young man give an oration on 'The Glory and Honor of the American Flag,' or 'After the Alps Lies Italy,'—subjects about which the audience knew nothing and in which they were not interested. But now our ideas have broadened so that in our last program we had the stage fitted up with a stove, table and other necessities and a young girl went through the whole process of preparing and serving a simple farm dinner for the audience. You have heard that turnip raising is a chief industry of Alabama, just as apple raising is a chief industry with you. So a bright young man was selected to tell the audience how to plant and raise turnips correctly, so that the best results might be obtained. A table piled with huge specimens of the vegetable stood beside him and at the close of his address he picked up two turnips and held them before the crowd. You should have heard those people cheer! These are subjects which interest the people because they know what the pupil is talking about and the pupil knows what he is talking about."

"And now, I think I have said all that is of interest to you and I beg you to excuse me if my talk has been rather disjointed. I might compare my case with that of an old negro whom I met one day who seemed to be in some trouble. I asked him what the trouble was and he said: 'I've had a heap of trouble at home. My ole woman left the door of the chicken coop open and the chickens all got out and went home. I think that is the way with me, my thoughts have all got out and gone home. I am grateful for this large audience and if ever I come to Hood River again I shall certainly visit Hood River valley. Thank you.'

Reported by Emma Noble,
Frankton High School, '13.

BEALS PLANS FROST WARNINGS

Edward A. Beals, district forecaster of the United States Weather Bureau, who is located at Portland has sent to the Glacier the following communication:

"During the months of April and May when frosts may be expected in the Hood River valley, the forecast district comprising the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, the chief of the weather bureau, Professor Willis L. Moore, has arranged to have in seven localities trained men on the ground prepared to amplify the district forecasts by using fine fruit raisers just what minimum temperatures may be expected on frosty mornings. This it is believed can be done within a degree or two if verified by the temperatures obtained at our 'key' stations liberally distributed in these sections. The fruit raisers should know how the temperature in the orchard varies from the temperature nearest the 'key' station, and thus be able to determine very closely just what to expect in the way of frost in this place when warnings of frost are issued."

The names of the localities where Professor Moore has arranged for his service and the assistants designated for handling the local end of the work are as follows:

Rogue River valley, Ashland to Grants Pass, Medford, Oregon, Prof. P. J. O'Garra.

Hood River valley, entire valley, Hood River, Ore., Prof. W. H. Lawrence.

Yakima valley, Naches to Pasco, North Yakima, Wash., T. R. Reed.

Wenatchee valley, Leavenworth to Wenatchee, Wash., K. M. Harding.

Puget Sound valley, Kent to Orting, Seattle Wash., G. N. Salisbury.

Lewiston-Clarkston district, Lewiston, Ida., W. W. Thomas.

Boise district, Weiser to Boise, Boise, Ida., E. L. Wells.

Fruit raisers are invited to call or correspond with these men for further information. They can also call upon them to compare their thermometers if in doubt regarding their accuracy at temperatures near the frost mark."

In other sections warnings will be issued as heretofore, being classified as light or heavy according to the general meteorological conditions prevailing at the time. When a light frost is predicted it means a frost with no destructive effects except to tender plants and vines in exposed places. When a heavy frost is predicted the conditions are such as to lead to the belief that staple products will be injured.

The recipients of these warnings should distinguish between the two classes; the light frost warning being issued when it is expected that fruit will not be injured, but as a possible forerunner of heavy frost, and also for the benefit of those having crops in low places where frosts occur with greater severity and with more frequency than commonly experienced in the neighborhood. When warnings of heavy frosts are issued damaging temperatures are expected to be general, and all those prepared to protect their crops should be on the alert for them. In a country with topography so diversified as that in the north Pacific states much will have to be left to the individual fruit raiser in places where the work has not been localized, and every warning whether of a light or heavy frost will most likely need some amplification by the man on the ground."

Pictures Show Havoc

Two books of interesting pictures, showing scenes of the havoc of the storm in Omaha by the recent tornado, were on exhibition at the jewelry store of A. F. Laraway last week. The photographs, which were gathered by the Omaha Bee, showed the fierce power of the terrible storm. Mr. Laraway was formerly a resident of Glenwood, Iowa. He has an album containing photographs of an orchard owned by him at the time of his residence there which was struck by the wind.

South African Peach Show

Yes, it was a real peach and not the kind that the Old Box of the Iowa peach thing was meant. A real fruit peach and all the way from South Africa. A friend of E. H. Shepard's had sent the peach to him last week from Chicago, where they sometimes sell for $1 a piece. The peach was on exhibition in the window of Laraway's jewelry store. It looked good, but not a dollar's worth.

Valley Pleases Bostonian

As he was leaving here last week with Mrs. Timlin, A. M. Timlin, of Boston, said: "If we can arrange our business affairs, and it is quite likely we can, you will probably soon see us among you again." Mr. and Mrs. Timlin, who were here last year, left here and took a trip over the southern states that are adapted to fruit growing, whether in the north or North Carolina in the vicinity of Asheville.

Mr. Timlin thinks that Hood River, because of the beauty of the scenery, and the people living here, is the most attractive region he has seen. On Tuesday evening of last week he and Mrs. Timlin were entertained by Dr. and Mrs. J. F. Watt, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Carter and other friends of Dr. and Mrs. Watt were present.
