DAD'S BOY

"Well," said dad, as he tucked his napkin under his chin, "I've just figured up for this year, Mary, and what do you suppose it has cost us to live?" Ma flared right up and answered so quick, that, as the preacher says at the prayer meetin', there wasn't no time to waste. "I'm sure I don't know what it's cost us," says ma, "but goodness know no woman could be more savin' than I am. You're always throwin' it up in my face," says she, "about the cost of livin', but if anybody could be any more scrimpin' and careful than I am I'd like to see 'em. There's one thing sure," says ma, "I don't spend any money for cigars or lodges or banquets," and when she said this she shot a look at dad that was so hot it burned a hole in his bib. Dad kinda grinned, put another spoonful of codfish gravy on his baked potato, opened his mouth to say something and then closed it right up ag'in, 'cause ma wasn't through and when she ain't through, it's a mighty poor time for dad to begin 'cause he won't get far enough to pay him for starting. "There's one thing," says ma, "that I've always wanted you to do which you won't do, and that is to keep an account of your personal expenses and submit 'em to me the first of every month. You must be spendin' money for things you don't want me to know about, Henry, or else you'd do it," and as ma said this she commenced to wipe the corners of her eyes with her handkerchief, which is sure sign that what's been said ain't really a patchin' to what's comin'. Dad tried to head her off by askin' if she would have another potato or some more codfish or somethin', but 'twasn't no use and dad seemed to sense it, 'cause he grabbed his napkin and started to get up, but she stopped him by sayin', "You set right where you are, Henry, 'til I get through talkin', you've got a great habit lately of pretendin' you've suddenly thought of something you've got to do before I finished what I'm sayin'." Now," says ma, "what I want to know is, where does all the money you make go?" "Well," says dad, "what I was about to say, Mary, when you started in on your Chautauqua course was this; it's cost us, due to your careful management, quite a little less to live this year than it did last, so when I figured up I was so tickled over it and also so mighty proud of you, that I decided to give you a nice cash present." Sayin' this, dad commenced to dig down in his jeans, for his wallet, but ma flagged him by sayin' "Never mind about that just now, whatever you've got in your pocket book, Henry, is half mine anyway; what I want to know is, what do you spend your half for." Dad looked at ma a minute and then started to say something, but all he got out was "shucks" and then he quit. The upshot of it was, that dad finally went down to Gilbert's and bought ma a new buggy, which she'd been harpin' about for sometime. Next year I reckon ma will keep at him till he spends his half for a Power Sprayer down at Gilbert's.

WHITE SALMON.

E. Christenson and family left last week for Underwood Flat where he will work on Rev. H. C. Lowden's ranch.

Several residents of Trout Lake report having seen a meteor of exceptional brilliance pass over that section Saturday night, Feb. 14. The meteor is said to have followed a northwest to southwest course, and to have burst into numerous pieces when apparently high over Table Mountain. Those who claim to have seen the celestial wanderer say it was big as the moon looks.

Because of the proposed increase in express and refrigeration rates on strawberries the growers of this section and members of the local Commercial club during the past week wired strong protests to the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C. against such a raise.

The proposed increase is now up before the Commission and should the express companies secure the raise in their rates it would mean a severe blow to the strawberry growers of this section—a raise from 6 to 18 cents a crate in shipping to the middle west in addition to an increase of icing rates. Telegrams were sent to the Washington delegation and to the Commission.
