THE COLUMBIA ROAD AGAIN

The proposed bonds for the completion of an open way over the Columbia river highway is again a live issue with local people. A proposed road bond has been talked now for over a year, and yet the talk has never developed any definite action. Citizens have talked for the bonds and others talked against them, and old Father Time has moved steadily along. The matter has never reached even the verge of a solution.

The matter of bonding the county for the opening of the Columbia river highway rests absolutely with the people. We think there is sufficient support of such a proposed issue among the citizens of the county to at least justify the calling of an election to settle the matter. If the electors of the county then see fit to vote an issue sufficient to open the scenic highway, then well and good, and if not, then well and good, also. But why not call an election and settle it?

Viewing the situation in an unbiased manner, the Glacier has always favored the opening of the Columbia river highway. We do not mean that the county should go to the expense of cutting out the highway on the state survey its entire length. Such a problem is impossible for the county of Hood River. But the county can, if the people see fit, by the expenditure of a sum not to exceed $75,000 open the way, and make it possible for motorists from Portland and the outside world to reach the valley in their own vehicles. We know that many of the community's best citizens interpose the objections that the local roads should be improved before any money is expended on a highway leading from outside districts. Their arguments are worthy of the deepest consideration. But can we afford to wait? While our local roads, highly improved, will be a great asset to us, for a moment consider the asset of having the Columbia river road opened next year, when thousands of motoring tourists will visit the Pacific coast. The future growth of the Hood River valley depends on the efforts that we make in interesting wealthy people seeking home locations in a community that offers the attractions that may be found on every hand here. These prospective home seekers are not going to come into the community and build the road for us, at least they will not open the route, and yet if we have an unbroken route, although it may not be hard-surfaced, many will come in over such a thoroughfare and, seeing the possibilities of its future convenience, will cast their lots and help with future improvements.

Unless the route is opened before next year, the Hood River valley will in all probability remain isolated, in so far as the Columbia river highway is concerned, for a number of years. If opened at once, we feel justified in predicting that it will soon be pushed to completion by the state, as a state highway. The road is in fact a state road, and as such should be permanently improved and maintained. Indeed, this must and will be the logical evolution in the construction of the highway. If we have started the work of opening the present impassable stretches between here and the Multnomah county line, a work that should be well on toward completion by the time the legislature meets, the state's legislative body should be inclined to lend assistance next winter.

OUR ROSES Hood River has at the present time a rose show, and although Portland is called the City of Roses, right here in the little Apple City as many citizens, proportionately, will be found taking an interest in their rose gardens as in the metropolises. Hedges and bowers and clumps of rose bushes, well kept and cared for, are found in all parts of the city, and daily, husbands and wives, young men and maidens, may be seen at work plucking a dead leaf, executing a slug or destroying a host of aphids. And the roses thrive wonderfully and repay their owners, as well as all who may look with grateful eyes or who may breathe in the delicious perfume. And no stranger who walks the streets of the residence portion of the town in the spring and summer months can but murmur words of pleasure at the sight of the magnificent blooms.

The time for the annual school election is near at hand. As a general rule the citizens of school districts fail to take proper interest in the election of their boards and the affairs of the district generally. Write down in your date book Monday, June 15, and remember it as a date of importance. No Hood River institution is of more importance than its schools. No member of the school board has ever taken more interest in the welfare of the schools than has Dr. Dumble, and the Glacier desires to commend him for his past efforts and to recommend him to the patrons of the school for a continuation in office.

Traveling in 18 automobiles, 31 citizens of Sunnyside, Wash., and surrounding community, invaded The Dalles last Sunday, says The Dalles

Chronicle, that city being the objective point of a pleasure trip which covered a distance of 110 miles. When we read of incidents of such a journey it presents itself to us as an argument for good roads, and especially as an argument for the opening of the Columbia river highway. How many motorists of Portland and the Willamette valley would make Hood River their objective point, were the scenic road opened?

PROTEST MADE ON FREAK LEGISLATION

The Lane County Manufacturers Association closed its county exhibition with a banquet at which prominent business men from western Oregon cities discussed industrial conditions, and voiced unanimous protest against laws crippling industries and development of the state. Col. Hofer responded for the press of the state, and declared there was a strong feeling of distrust among newspapermen as to the advisability of any more restrictive legislation. He cited the nation wide distribution of canned pineapple at $1.50 per dozen to the retailer, when Oregon peaches and other canned fruit of the same grades sold at $2 to $3 per dozen. The pineapple is put up and grown by coolie labor with no restrictions as to hours, and no minimum wage law. Manager Holt, of the Fruit Growers Association, said freight rates, power problems, price of raw material, could all be dealt with, but the uncertainties and unsettled conditions caused by legislation they could not cope with. Vice President A. J. Kingsley pointed out the difficulties created by the Workingmen's Compensation act, and said unless it was changed large factories could not come under it. A. Norman, of the Pacific Light & Power Co., showed that Oregon had the raw materials and the transportation for distribution of products and facilities to get an abundance of labor. All that was needed was capital. Capital must know that it is safe from confiscation when put out. It must be sure of a reasonable and certain return, and must not be taxed out of existence. There must be an end of harassing legislation.

R. W. Raymond, manager of the Manufacturers Association, said Oregon was getting 50 per cent less colonies than a year ago, while California was getting 20 per cent less. He predicted that shipments now going to Portland would in the future go to Astoria, and Eugene would some day occupy the same place as a distributing point as Portland did now. He got a good round of applause when he said the manufacturers of the state would go before the legislature and present a solid front against any more industrial legislation. He announced the formation of a new commission to conduct an industrial survey of Oregon.

Jeffrey Returns Thanks May 19, 1914. Editor Glacier: Through the columns of your paper, I wish to thank my friends in Hood River county for their contribution to the magnificent vote which I received at the primary election for the office of attorney general of the state of Oregon. I believe in the equal rights of all men before the law, regardless of nationality or occupation, and as attorney general, shall endeavor to so enforce the law and also to keep it myself. I believe in the subordination of the military to the civil power at all times. Very truly yours, John A. Jeffrey. (paid ad)
