THE COLUMBIA HIGHWAY

The Columbia highway before this time next year will be an open road through Hood River county.

The Lincoln highway in the progressive communities through which it passes is being built for the ages.

To no one else more than to S. Benson does Hood River county owe the assets and privileges of which we have spoken.

The wealthy men of the country, who would be philanthropic, would do well to follow the example of S. Benson.

THE UPPER VALLEY ATTITUDE

The Upper Valley citizens, who are recently organized for the purpose of securing better roads for their community, have the right attitude.

"Let the county court appoint some competent engineer, who shall select the route best suited as to topography and the needs of all people to be served," they say.

It is gratifying to see agitation of such a nature. The Upper Valley deserves and needs a well built trunk line, and a systematic road survey, incorporating plans for businesslike methods of selection, construction and maintenance.

The Portland Journal is making a strong campaign to have Portland capitalize the asset of Mount Hood's scenery. A road to Mount Hood is proposed.

It should be a lesson to the local citizens who signed the petition to the county court last spring calling for the City of Utility election, that they are now called on to bear the expenses of the election.

Now that the drives have been improved at the passenger station, why not make a decent walk from the foot of Second street to the west end of the station?

Many of the forest fires that take a toll of the state's natural timber wealth each year, it is declared, can be traced directly to the fires of hunters.

FISH, FURS AND FEATHERS

The most valuable dog in Hood River county is the blooded fox hound owned by Alva L. Day, of the Electric Wiring & Supply Co.

The members of the "Hunt Club," Al. Cruikshank and Sol. Spear, plan on some good sport this fall.

For the past seven years Dr. and Mrs. Howell, of Portland, have been spending several weeks each summer camping and fishing on the West Fork of Hood River in the vicinity of Mineral Springs.

Dr. and Mrs. Howell drove to their summer camping ground this summer in their automobile, making the trip up the Sandy and around Mount Hood by the Barlow road.

The following Mosier people, who have been camped near Lost Lake, have returned to their home: Ernest Evans and family, Mrs. Geo. Chamberlain and children, William Rowland and family, and Misses Marjorie Page, Emily Huskins and Gladys Phillips.

Than E. W. Middleswart Hood River has no more enthusiastic fisherman. Mr. Middleswart formerly lived in Mosier.

China pheasants are very plentiful in the Frankton district, according to Donald Nickelsen. The beautiful birds are still protected from the hunter in Hood River county.

Mr. Benson has assisted in getting state aid. He has secured the cooperation of the State Highway Commission.

W. B. McGuire, W. B. Mulford and R. E. Johnson were out Sunday afternoon west of the city, testing out their rifles, making ready for the game of the wildfowls as soon as Governor West lifts the embargo on the deer hunting season.

J. H. Fredrick, after a rather prolonged retirement from the ranks of the local fishermen, was unable to resist the lure of the purling streams Sunday.
