may work for awhile, but not for long. We give you credit for possessing more common sense than to believe that we could sell shoes at a loss and pay our expenses right along. Things that are sold cheaply are apt to be cheap in quality. "The right kind at the right price" is our motto.

NEAR BY SCENIC HIGHWAY POINTS

Between Benson Point and the city of Hood River are some of the most beautiful points to be seen along the Columbia highway between Hood River and Portland. Benson Point, itself, is a boulder-made promontory jutting from the Columbia canyon just at the top of Rubtson hill. It is here that some form of testimonial to S. Benson is proposed. The point is used as a turn around, and many visitors from the city drive this far and stop for the excellent view before returning to the city.

At Benson Point the sightseer gets an unexcelled view of the Columbia river. The Merton place, leased by the Purity Dairy, lies directly beneath, the rows of growing crops and meadows, the willow along the edge of the Columbia and the green water of the pools, the barns and houses of the dairy farm, all form a pleasing picture viewed from this eyrie point. The Point, itself, is a rocky ledge, and battered pine tree at the top, and with its sides covered with a deep green moss, seems the product of some giant landscape artist.

Just east of Benson Point is the home of W. T. Price-Gliffie. Mr. Price has cleared the canyon top in front of his residence, thus getting the benefit of the view of the river. At the edge of the canyon he has built a little rustic house, where, the weary pedestrian may sit and look at pastoral scenes of the dairy farm or the broad sweep of the majestic river. Just east of Mr. Price's place is the home of J. W. Hinrichs. In front of Mr. Hinrichs' residence is a point that for the view it offers, both up and down the river, is unsurpassed.

Passing on to the east one comes to the lookout point of the Wau-Guin-Guin tract, the house built there held in place by cables, for the winter wind, if the house were not anchored, would soon sweep into the river level below. Wau-Guin-Guin, itself, an old falls of Phelps creek there, have been so often described that every one in the county knows of them. Most of the people of the valley have visited the scenic spot, which has been beautified by Robert Rand, its owner.

East of Wau-Guin-Guin is the DeHart place, now in charge of E. J. Copper. The DeHarts have a summer home on the very edge of the perpendicular cliffs of the Columbia. The site of this home cannot be surpassed on the noted Hudson or the Rhine.

The road leading out to Benson Point is so little used by the people of the county that it is really not appreciated at its full worth. That is, the scenery that it affords the man traveling for pleasure are not appreciated. After the winter's thaw the highway now could not be traveled by any one with very much appreciation. But soon it will become a part of the Columbia highway, and bids fair to become one of the most popular stretches in Hood River county.

Masiker Stories Tell of Lost Barber

Dick Turpin, the barber who was lately lost for hours out among the hills of Morrow county is not the first one to wander among the canyons in eastern Oregon, as in Carson Masiker's story of the pioneers of the 60s he tells of a Portland barber who was sent out into that country to look after the effects of a man who was murdered while driving a pack train from Canyon City to the Dalles, says the Optimist of that city. Mr. Masiker is now a resident of the Odell district.

The barber mentioned had transacted business and started home on horseback with the mail carrier. Sometime between the John Day and Deschutes he stopped to tighten his saddle girth, the mail carrier went on over the hill and the barber couldn't find the trail and wandered for four days but did not strike a road. He killed his horse but couldn't cook the meat and could not eat it raw; he wandered a day afoot, then concluded he could eat raw horse and wandered two more days trying to find the horse. On the seventh day he struck a trail and found food and shelter.

Of Local Interest

Some People We Know, and We Will Profit by Hearing About Them

This is purely local event. It took place in Hood River. Not in some faraway place. You are asked to investigate it. Asked to believe a citizen's word. To conform a citizen's statement. Any article that is endorsed at home is more worthy of confidence. Than one you know nothing about. Endorsed by unknown people.

"I suffered from backache for four or five months from backache," says Mrs. A. Samuel, of 1210 Seventh St., Hood River. "When I heard of a neighbor having used Doan's Kidney Pills with good results, I gave them a trial. Less than one box fixed me up all right and I have not had any trouble since. I am glad to confirm what I said about Doan's Kidney Pills, when I recommended them some years ago."

APPLE NOTES

The Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture has had introduced into the legislature a bill providing for a standard apple barrel, which will be of 7000 cubic inches capacity, less by 56 inches than the national standard barrel. The bill calls for a bushel box to contain 2,350 cubic inches and of the following inside measurements: 18x11x10 inches. The proposed grading rules call for fancy, firsts, seconds and unclassified. Closed packages for shipment within the state must bear a printed statement designating either a bushel or barrel of standard size, name and address of owner or shipper at time of packing as to variety, class and grade of fruit. If the apples were grown in Massachusetts it must be shown. The State Board of Health shall have authority of enforcing the bill and assessing punishment for its violation.

The "buy a box" slogan has perhaps never reached the cotton states of the south, but judging from a letter from a resident of a cotton belt town to St. Joseph, Mo., Fruit Grower and Farmer, the slogan will take. If the consumers of those districts could get fruit at reasonably low rates. The writer of the letter mentioned says:

"I have no doubt that campaigns for the popularization of apples with the consuming public will do much good. But remember this—apples are already mighty popular with us. The real problem is to get the fruit to us at a reasonable price. 'Thousands of little towns in the cotton belt have never been reached with apples in carlots, and I am firmly convinced that every one of them would take a carload or two of fruit, if they could get it at an attractive price.'"

Writing to the Glacier from El Monte, Calif., F. G. Wilson, a former local resident, says that Hood River apples are selling in southern California at from $1.50 to $2.40 per box.

The apple growers are interested in the doings of the citrus districts, for both apple growers and orange orchardists have similar problems. In April of this year Riverside, Calif., plans a great celebration to observe the founding of the citrus industry. Today hundreds of millions of dollars are invested in this industry. Our forefathers considered oranges could only be eaten on special occasions, for a man must be mighty well to do to have them served at will on his table. Today they are as common as home grown apples. William Saunders in the father of California oranges. He secured from it some small trees especially budded. His first shipment died in transit. He had another sent, packed according to his minute directions. The trees grew in a greenhouse in Washington. Through Gen. Butler, then in congress from Massachusetts, some of the trees passed to the hands of Mrs. C. L. Tibbets, of Riverside. The trees are still living, known as the Washington Naval oranges. This was the start of the great citrus industry of southern California. The first apples of the northwest were grown from a tree planted by a British officer at Vancouver, Wn. The seed was brought from England.

Apple growers market on an average but 40 per cent of their crop, declared O. H. Benson, expert of the department of agriculture, in an address last week in Portland. Was it more to blame for this condition than insufficient markets, he explained.

"With more thrift in this country, more saving and less waste, living costs might be cut in two, for we waste about half our supplies," he said.

The old way of canning fruit will not do any more, according to Mr. Benson, whose specialty is the organizing of boys' and girls' industrial clubs.

With a canning outfit, and fruit, including oranges, from the public market, Mr. Benson showed how fruit should be canned. Instead of using the old method and boiling the fruit in an open vessel, he put it in a closed utensil and held it at a temperature less than boiling for about an hour and 20 minutes. This process, he explained, sterilizes the fruit and the cell structure is not broken down by boiling.

It is generally known in the northwest that the Puyallup and Sumner Fruit Growers' Association is one of the most successful organizations of its kind in the country. It was organized in 1902, with a capital stock of $2,000, which has been increased now to $2,603. The success of the organization is due in great part to the efforts of the president, a general manager, W. H. Paulhamus. So valuable are the services of Mr. Paulhamus considered that the annual report of the association for the year 1914 says:

"In order to extend the best possible financial standing to the association the life of the president and general manager, W. H. Paulhamus, is insured in favor of the Puyallup & Sumner Fruit Growers' Association in the sum of $25,000 in case of death from any cause.

"Accident policies in the sum of $37,500 are also carried. The latter policies are subject to many different conditions according to the nature of the accident. For example, if he should meet death on a railroad train or an automobile, the amount of the death loss would be $75,000, plus the regular policies of $25,000 referred to above, making a total amount to the Association of $100,000. These policies were obtained at an annual cost to the Association of $1,199.75. All premiums paid to June 15, 1915."

On December 31 of last year the Association had a net surplus of $210,000. It has a membership of 1,600 growers. It has canneries in the Puyallup and Sumner valleys with a floor space of more than 125,000 feet.

The will of the late Mrs. Adella A. Stranahan, one of Hood River's pioneer women, who passed away at her home here recently, was filed for probate last week, and showed a bequest of $500 for the Asbury Methodist church and $1000 for the Columbia river conference claimants. Mrs. Stranahan was always one of the church's most active members. For a number of years she was Sunday school superintendent. One of the large, handsome windows in the Asbury church was given by her in memory of her husband, the late O. H. Stranahan. Albert K. Stranahan, Mrs. Stranahan's son, is named as executor.
