PRESIDENT KERR DISCUSSES ATHLETICS

means of providing all students with incentive and opportunity for proper physical development, rather than of training the few for intercollegiate contests. At the Oregon Agricultural College a department of physical education is maintained. In addition to the regular gymnasium work, students are encouraged to participate, as far as practicable, in outdoor sports or ex-ercises of various kinds. A great deal forms of contests among the students themselves, and in which hundreds participate, than to the training of a few students for intercollegiate contests.

Take the Oregon State Agricultural College, for instance. I presume that thus far this year more space has actually been given by some of the state papers to athletics than all other college activities combined; and yet the fact is that at the college participation in athletics is a mere incident and is Shay & Whitcomb, The Electric Thenot allowed to interefere with the reg-ular studies. This year the only games requiring the absence of the football requiring the absence of the football players from any class work are the Michigan game at Lansing and the Syracuse game at Portland, the latter to be played December 1. The Michigan game took the men from college ten days. For the Syracuse game they will miss one day's work. But all the work missed has to be made up.

Upon the return of the team from Michigan, a great deal of space was given in the press to the announcement given in the press to the announcement of celebrations in bonor of the players. Notwithstanding the big demonstrations at the college, however, the arrange-ments were such that the students did not miss a single recitation.

Another idea that is more or less revalent is that football men, particularly, are interested primarily, if not entirely, in athletics, and that they take as little other work as possible, and usually fail in it. At the Oregon Agricultural College, students who participate in athletics are under the Agricultural College, students who participate in athletics are under the same regulations as other students. They must carry regular work and maintain satisfactory grades; otherwise they not only are inhibited from participating in any athletic contest, but their standing in the institution would be jeopardized. And any work missed by athletes, as well as other students, must be made up.

The character of the men participating in athletics and their standing as students are indicated by the following report of the registrar: Of this year's football team, one is a graduate student, having received his first degree at the college last June; nine are seniors; seven are sophomores, and three are freshmen. The average grade for the last semester of the men on this year's football team was 83 per cent. The 22 men participating in track last spring averaged 85 per cent. The captain of this year's team, with the greatest record last year as a sprinter, averaged 94 per cent.
