GROWERS FINED FOR WORMY SHIPMENTS

The first two cases in the Hood River fruit district and probably in the state, under the new horticultural law, which prohibits the shipment or sale of wormy or diseased apples except to canneries or other by-products plants which change the identity of the fruit, were heard here Saturday by Justice of the Peace Othman who assessed the minimum fine of $5 against Oscar Vanderbilt and Chas. H. Castner, both of whom pleaded guilty. The law governing the cases was adopted by the last legislature.

In a statement to the court Mr. Vanderbilt, owner of the largest East Side orchards, said that the consignment of wormy fruit for which he was held responsible resulted from work of inexperienced packers. "Easy with the harvest," said the grower, "I instructed two experienced Japanese packers to teach some of their fellow countrymen how to pack last Sunday. They were told to make ready for shipment a block of Kings. Following my arrest for shipping wormy apples I have learned that the Japanese men not only put other boys to work, but engaged their wives. Nor did they make any distinction between good and bad apples."
