CROSS IS TO BE EPISCOPAL SHRINE CHURCH ESTABLISHES PRECEDENT

The historic "Prayerbook Cross," in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, which shortly is to be consecrated by the Protestant Episcopal Church as its first shrine.

San Francisco shortly is to have the honor of the first shrine ever consecrated by the Protestant Episcopal Church and the first, it is confidently believed by members of the church, in a chain of wayside shrines along the mighty automobile highways which now span the continent.

Turned by the griefs of war to more devout consideration of affairs religious and stirred to militancy by the nationwide campaign now forward within the church, Episcopalians of the Bay cities have laid before Rt. Rev. William Ford Nichols, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of California, a proposal to consecrate and proclaim the historic "Prayerbook Cross" in Golden Gate Park as a shrine for all wayfaring Episcopalians.

The "Prayerbook Cross" is a magnificent pile which surmounts one of the most picturesquely beautiful hills in Golden Gate Park.

The cross was consecrated seventeen years ago as a memorial to the first religious service ever held on the Pacific Coast in the English language. On June 24, 1879, that hardy buccaner, Sir Francis Drake, missing the port of San Francisco entirely owing to fog and storm, landed at what is now known as Drake's Bay, northward of San Francisco Bay. In thanksgiving for the escape of the expedition from the storm they all "fell to prayers" in the quaint language of the chronicler of the expedition.

The cross was erected by George W. Childs, of Philadelphia. The ceremonies in consecrating the cross as a shrine will be celebrated during the coming Nation-Wide Campaign of the Episcopal Church, as a memorial to the campaign.
