FINS, FURS AND FEATHERS

An old black shepherd dog, turning gray around the edges and with one for an extended stay in the coal min- their way from Cashmere, Wash., to eye blind, trotting down the main street last week, brought recollections of ante-bellum days to Hood River folk. It was Mariooch, mascot 10 years ago of the Hood River University Club and one time property of Henri de Reding, young Swiss orchardist who was alled back to his native land to active military service when the great war began. Where the old shepherd got the name has been forgotten. To regain that bit of information it might now be ecessary to search the four corners of the globe, for the members of the once famed University Club, with whom the dog was a general favorite, are now scattered afar. But it may be explained that the name is misleading. Mariooch is an all-round he dog, and for years held the Hood River county championship as a fighter. Bulldogs, collies and siredales all met defeat tat Mariooch was conquering some new scores are being made daily, aspirant to the championship or an ig erant country dog that had wandered
