The Ford Truck is a necessity to the grocer both in delivering goods and in bringing goods from the stations, docks and from the country. It is an ideal motor car because there isn't a want of the farmer or business man that it doesn't supply in the way of quick transportation at a minimum expense. Come in, examine the Truck, and let us talk over the subject.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM MIKA TILLICUM

Editor Glacier:—It might be of interest to your readers to peruse the log of Mika Tillicum. Not that he likes to blow his own horn, but that others, following in his wake, might avoid some of the difficulties that beset his pathway when he ventured forth again to buck the sad realities of a cold and cruel world in search of the elusive fountain of delight. I will briefly recount a few minor incidents that occurred to him to the end that others' cups of joy might not spring a leak and "spoil the beans."

December 15 was a day of moment in the Tillicum household,—the summer was past, the harvest ended, and we were not rich, but by frugality and chasing nimble nickels, and squeezing them until the fat had flowed, at last we had accumulated a horde of filthy lucre, sufficient it seemed to enter on an orgy of extravagance, take a trip and buy a pair of suspenders for our other pants. This was the day we were to plume our wings or flight and "fly the coop" and flock southward. "Ah! there was hurrying to and fro, for there was the thousand and one little things to do that should not be left undone, and last but not least, glad rags, and collar buttons cut some ice in the confusion.

The writer is owner in fee simple of a quart of collar buttons, more or less, but when it came to a showdown, they were out on their vacation. Here is "where a feller needs a friend," and there is always one to loan you a button if you will not mention larger change.

My letter half, being a firm believer in putting her house in order, at nearly the last moment of our limited time, discovered a broken rockered wicker chair, (that Tillicum had fallen over in chasing a feller's collar button to its lair behind the dresser), and grabbing it, made a heroic rush for the attic, but she came to grief in the stairway. Here was the crux of a triangled dilemma that threatened to spell disaster. The Queen of hearts tangled in the stairway, Tillicum pivoting on all fours trying to pick up the cold scent of a collar button and our train whistling at Squally Hook. The fact that Squally Hook is several miles from Hood River saved the day, for it gave us time to hold a family conference, discover the fifth dimension of the chair and put on a necktie and collar button.

Our train, No. 17, left Hood River at 5:15 p. m. and in due time landed us at the Union Passenger Station in Portland, where with the knights of the grip, ladies of fashion, and "fellow tons of soil" (as the frustrated orator said), we swarmed into the waiting rooms, nestled down the aisles, and eddied around the corners, like a river at flood time overflowing its banks.

As we had several hours to wait before our train departed, we answered the call of the inner man and took dinner at the well appointed lunch room adjacent to the waiting rooms, after which we took a walk on the street.

Pointing at some apples, we asked a woman fruit vendor where were Hood River apples. She said, "Oh they are better than Hood River apples, they are Delicious." Being told they raise Delicious in Hood River, and that we live there, she said, "Oh, then I guess you know more about apples than I do." She evidently thought Hood River was a variety and not a place.

At 9:30 p. m. we were permitted to go aboard and our size up the prospects for a night of sweet repose.

More anon,
Mika Tillicum.

FUNGUS NOT CAUSE OF SPOTTED APPLES

Frank Fenwick, who sent specimens of apples showing a peculiar red spot on the skin, a defect widely scattered here this fall, to a bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., has just received a letter stating that experts there consider that the spots result from application of Bordeaux Mixture and some peculiar weather conditions. The spots, the department finds, are not caused by any fungus disease, and the apples, it is stated, will keep well. The letter received by Mr. Fenwick follows:

Our opinion, upon receipt of the apple, was that the spots were caused by Bordeaux, but we have delayed answering in order to take time to test the spots out for the presence of any fungus or other foreign organism. Our tests show that there is no disease organism present, and we feel all the more certain that the disease is due to Bordeaux. We have frequently produced conditions exactly like this in our experimental plots, the Bordeaux sprayed apples having the red spots while those receiving other treatments were free from them. Other spray materials sometimes cause speckling of the fruit, but usually more of a russet type. We have also seen very similar spots on trees that had not been sprayed, especially on seedling varieties, but never in such large numbers as we have had on our Bordeaux sprayed trees, and such cases we have attributed the trouble to some peculiar weather conditions that resulted in an unusual amount of cracking and breaking of the tissue at the lenticels and breathing pores. Anything that will produce small breaks in the epidermis of the apple will produce spots of this sort, especially if the injury comes fairly late in the season.

We certainly look with great favor upon the high standard of quality that is maintained by the associations of your section and would not be inclined to suggest any changes, yet we have never seen any evidence that such spots as these affect the keeping quality of the fruit and it would seem a question whether they should be put in the same class with small scab spots and insect injuries.

Slide Blocks Highway

An avalanche just east of the Hood River-Wasco county line deposited an estimated 300 cubic yards of rock and debris on the Columbia River Highway between here and Mosier Thursday night. As the O-W. R. & N. line prevented dumping of the debris over the edge, crews were forced to haul the slide away, and the highway was closed two days as a result.

Four other slides prevailed the previous week, but none have caused other than temporary blockades.
