'The "father and son" movement received a commendable stimulus recently at the local dinner given by Hood River fathers to their sons. The happy relationship of mutual confidence, love and respect between a man and a family of sons is something that almost creates covetousness in the less fortufortunate. No obstacle can stand in the way of a man and his boys when they set their heads on cooperating for the accomplishment of some worthy end in life. The father should begin while the boy is still a little tad to take the son into his confidence, make himself companionable to him, talk business, sports and more trivial incidens over with him. Create in him a need for his father. The future rewards both to boy and father are sure. The evening meal of every family, where there are boys, should

America Has Not Accorded Due Honor to Her Gifted Son, Is Opinion of Hamilton W. Mable.

A national literature must have many notes, and Poe struck some which in pure melodic quality had not been heard before. As literary interests broaden, and the provincial point of view gives place, the American estimate of Poe will approach more nearly the foreign estimate. That estimate was based mainly on a recognition of Poe's artistic quality and of the marked individuality of his work. Lowell and Longfellow continued the old literary traditions; Poe seemed to make a new tradition. . . . The artist always pushes back the boundaries a little, and opens a window here it dreams, but which it sees so rarely; "'Hm. > Our Sister in Typhoid. In his "Past and Present," that opening gun of the midnineteenth century radical campaign, Thomas Carlyle tells a grisly story of a poor Irish widow in Edinburgh, who begged for help. "She was refused, -till her strength and heart fatled her; she sank down in typhus fever; died, and infected her lane with fever so that 17 other persons died of fever there in consequence. The forlorn Irish widow applies to her fellow creatures, 'Behold, I am sinking. I am your sister; one God made us.' They answer, 'No, impossible; thou art no sister of ours." But she proves her sisterhood; her typhus fever kills them; they are actually her brothers though denying it."

Man Has Much to Learn. Man thinks he is a pretty smart fellow now. And so he is, but it must be somewhat of a bump to his pride when he considers how long it took him to learn the few things that he knows. For it is really only a few things that man yet knows compared to the things that surely he is destined yet to know. It is true that he has invaded both the kingdoms of the fishes and the birds, that he can navigate the under waters of the seas and the upper winds of the nir, but these are probably small achievements in view of that which it is possible for him to nchieve in the future.-Los Angeles
