LOYD HUNT TELLS OF ORIENTAL TRIP

E. E. Hunt, manager of the Cash & Carry Grocery, is in receipt of a message from his son, Lloyd, who is the radio operator on the Portland built shipping board steamer Bearport, stating that they had a rough voyage across the Pacific. The steamer arrived in Japan early in March, shifted to China and Manchurian ports, thence to India for a full cargo of Java sugar, rice, jute and other such harvest product, moving from the Philippines. He says:

Japan cities, passengers travel about the streets in little two-wheeled carriages called jinrikishas, drawn by men. The islands are very mountainous, but the scenery beautiful. Many volcanoes and hot springs are on the islands. In China we went to see the great wall which is 12,000 miles long, much of which is standing. Mongolia used to be the home of robbers, and along time ago one of the emperors of China had his wall built to keep his people from these marauders. I am bringing home one of the old, black, sun-dried adobe straw bricks from this wall, also some of the Manchurian walnuts from Liaien.

"India, not so large as our U. S. A., has about four times as many people. This is the country where they have great jungles, abounding with tigers, leopards, elephants, rhinos, cheetahs, monkeys, beautiful birds and the cobra, the most poisonous snake known. It is fun to see the big elephants carry the burdens, kneel for their load of passengers and drag the heavy timber. I am told the cat, dog, horse, sheep, ox, hog and chicken originally came from this part of Asia, accompanying the people to Europe and thence to America.

"Many of the grains, fruits and vegetables came originally from this region. The magnificent marble palaces, temples and tombs built by the native kings are a sight long to be remembered. The Ganges valley is very fertile, having many irrigating canals, and on the Deccan plateau are large tanks to store the water which falls in the wet season. You should see the narrow gauge railway that leads to hill stations in the English towns in the mountains are called. The temples on the Ganges are great, massive structures and a design of art and beauty. The Hindus manufacture fine shawls, carpets, rugs, fine gold embroidery thread and beautiful jewelry. They have some fine modern factories, but most of their factory-made goods come from Europe.

"I am hoping to see one of the leper colonies. India, it is said, has 300,000 lepers. They are trying to cure them with chaulmoogra oil, which is extracted from a nut growing on the hydrocotyle tree, a variety of which is found on the island of Mindanao. It is educational to travel all over the world as I have done but I long to be back to good old U. S. A., where people do things right. Java is very hot, but beautiful. Batavia, capital of the Dutch East Indies, is where you see mosquitoes in great clouds; no spring, summer or winter here. Feather-weight clothing is in demand here at all times. The governor-general's palace at Batavia is one of the sturdiest and most beautiful buildings I have seen in my travels. The floors are of cararra marble, and Corinthian columns support the roof.

SUPER-BUTTERMILK IN STRONG DEMAND

Super-buttermilk a beverage manufactured by a process of cultures by the Hood River Creamery, has not only become popular as a general drink with local folk, but the product, according to recent reports, is in heavy demand by invalids. The buttermilk, made from whole milk, is used by many sick and it is declared to have aided in effecting cures for infants and adults in cases of stomach trouble. The super-buttermilk is being shipped in growing quantities to neighboring towns. Having been prescribed for its tonic effects, the beverage is being shipped to convalescents at Wasco.

THE COMMENT OF A WOMAN JUROR

(By Mrs. Alma L. Howe)
After attending court eight and one-half days with three days and one evening jury duty on a civil case, I would like to express my sincere feelings as a woman juror.

Mine was a very pleasant, comfortable experience, but I can readily see how at times it might be a most embarrassing situation. The 11 men who served with me were of the very best, many being neighbors and friends.

Court is an outcome of wrong doing where all sorts of crime, cruelty and wrongs, etc., are brought up for settlement. The worst side of humanity must be brought forward by the prosecution and the defense does all it can to make it appear different. So many of the cases coming into the courts could have been prevented if the proper training and discipline had been given when young. The home is the foundation of our national life, where all such training should begin.

Next, the church with its sacred teachings and influences, then the education, business and pleasures, with the courts as a culmination of all. Just as the home, church, schools, etc., have done their duty, so the courts are fed.

Clipped Here and There

I was greatly interested in the editorial in the Oregonian, under the caption, "The Legend of the Blue Bucket." Especially so, because my mother, Mrs. L. W. Loughary (maiden name, Simpson), was a member of that ill-fated immigrant train which Stephen Meek led astray in 1845.

My mother, who is in her 82d year and is the daughter of old pioneers, and Mrs. L. M. Simpson, is spending the winter in our home. She is hale and hearty, alert in mind and still can do more work than most girls at 16.

The well remembers when the train was lost on the Meek "cut-off," and the irate disfavor under which Meek fell. She distinctly remembers how one of the older girls of the party picked up shining nuggets, carrying them in the pockets of her apron, reaching the wagons placed them in a blue bucket—a wooden bucket painted blue on the outside. They were not found in a stream, but taken from a mound of earth.

Those nuggets were examined by members of the train who were uncertain as to their quality or value. The train came to a stream which my mother now thinks was Crooked river. The stream was too deep to ford, the oxen were forced to swim across. A rope crossing was improvised and by this means the belongings of the train were taken across the river.

By some mishap one wagon bed was capsized in the stream and all the contents were lost, including the blue bucket with the nuggets. The immigrants endured great hardships while negotiating the "Meek cut-off."

Under the stress of hunger a cow was killed to provide food. Upon reaching the Cascades (Cascade Locks), my mother's parents used the last bit of flour they had.

Late in the fall of 1845 they settled on their donation land claim in the Willamette valley, near Astoria, where they lived and passed away at a ripe age. The title of this land was from the United States government and remains unchanged to this day, excepting as vesting in the family.

in the job of developing a fruit farm isn't the least bit likely to be writing "back home" that he is dissatisfied in his new location.

In contrast would be the man who buys a developed tract, at top price, and is immediately confronted with the new and untried job of making it pay. If things go a little wrong it is this man who, in a few months, degenerates into one of those obnoxious pests known as the knocker. At present the Pacific Northwest why be so foolish as to grow another crop?

The best way to give honest value to the new settler and set him on the road to becoming a contented, prosperous booster is to see that he gets some land to develop.—Better Fruit.

Because of its bearing as a campaign issue when Senators McNary and Stanford came up for reelection, we have taken the time to read all the official documents and speeches on the Newberry case and hundreds of pages of newspaper analysis. Our conclusion is that no senator, having due regard for the rights of state to elect its own senator, could vote against seating Newberry. We do not see how Senators McNary and Stanford could rightfully have voted other than they did, for seating Newberry. For either of them to have voted otherwise would have been, in our opinion, an outrage of right principle.

We say this without condoning the heavy campaign expenditures made in behalf of Newberry nomination, or the loose methods of accounting for those expenditures. The record shows conclusively, however, in our opinion, that no money was used for corrupt purposes, or with criminal intent. Yet it was wildly and loosely expended. But if no crime was committed within the meaning of constitutional law, and Newberry received the most votes, we cannot see that any senator had any right, strictly speaking, to vote to deny him the seat to which he was elected.

Yet, although no crime was committed, we believe a huge wrong was committed within the law in that so large a sum of money was permitted to be spent by one family or group in a campaign. We have no objection to the total amount expended, but individual contributions to a campaign fund are dangerous when they run into tens of thousands to elect one man or pass one measure.

The remedy, we believe, is to limit the size of any individual contribution. Some arbitrary limit, such as $1,000, should be made. That would insure against any such possibility as a few people financing a costly election campaign.

We have no objection to the expenditure of $200,000 or any other huge sum in a state campaign for one man or one measure, provided the $200,000 comes from a very large number of people, in small contributions from each individual. Thus any great number of people may help a cause in which they believe. But no one person, be his name Newberry, Painless Parker, George B. Waters or C. S. Jackson, should be permitted to put up any large sum to carry a measure to elect a candidate.

We have had many instances here in Oregon just as flagrant as the Newberry case, but usually it was a pet measure which caused some individual or corporation to spend a huge sum in securing petition signatures and buying campaign publicity. The files of the Secretary of State reveal a large number of contributions in unreasonable large amounts whereby measures were made into laws in Oregon. And there are cases where the files do not show the truth.

How about the expenditures for the recent fair tax campaign in Portland? Were they all kept track of as the law required, with all the sources of small and large subscriptions made of record and filed as required by law?

This is aside from the issue of whether United States senators did right in voting for seating Newberry, but it is germane to the issue of whether large individual contributions should be permitted to elect any candidate or carry any measure. There is no real danger in a large campaign expenditure financed from a multitude of limited subscriptions. If enough people believe in a cause to subscribe a large number of small subscriptions, making a large campaign fund in the aggregate, the people should not be denied the right. But there is danger to good government when the brute power of money possessed by one individual is permitted to be exercised in a manner that sways an election.

Limit campaign contributions to $1,000, publish the source of each contribution no matter how small or how large, publish each expenditure item by item with the name of the ultimate recipient, and enforce careful accounting on all campaign matters, and there will be little danger of money accomplishing any great wrong in Oregon. But do not blame our United States Senators for voting to seat a candidate elected by a majority of the voters of his state merely because, without violating law, the members of his family expended far more money to elect him than any individuals should be permitted to expend.—Oregon Voter.

Just what is meant by this word "Hell"? They say sometimes, "It's cold as Hell." Sometimes they say, "It's hot as Hell." When it rains hard, "It's Hell," they cry; "It's also 'HELL' when it is dry. They 'Hate like Hell' to see if snow, it's a 'How in Hell' when it starts to blow. Now 'How in Hell' can anyone tell 'What in Hell' they mean by this word Hell? This married life is 'Hell,' they say. When he comes in late, 'there is Hell to pay.' It's Hell when the kid you have to tote; When he starts to yell, it's a 'Hell of a note.' 'It's Hell' when the doctor sends his bills. For a 'Hell of a lot' of trips and pills. When you get this you will know real well what is meant by this word HELL. 'Hell, yes,' 'Hell, no,' and 'Oh Hell,' too. 'The Hell you don't'—'The Hell you do.' And 'What in the Hell' and the 'Hell it is'—'The Hell with yours' and 'The Hell with this.' Now, 'Who in the Hell' and 'Oh Hell, where?' And 'What the Hell do you think I care?' But 'The Hell of it is,' 'It's sure as Hell,' 'We don't know what in the HELL is HELL!' —Falcon.
